Seniors enjoy greener pastures these days

BY JEFF PLASS

The Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf is known as the tournament that started the Senior Tour.

Before the Senior Tour came into existence, professional golfers practically had to take the gold watch and go home when they reached the age of 50.

Relegated to being teachers and club pros, they had little opportunity to reap the rich financial rewards that now exist. This year alone the Senior Tour will award more than $22 million in prize money.

Since joining the Senior Tour in 1985, Chi Chi Rodriguez has won 22 titles and amassed more than $4.5 million in earnings along the way.

So obviously, Rodriguez is grateful to the people who got the Senior Tour going and made it so profitable for golfers over the age of 50.

"Let me tell you something," Rodriguez states, "Don January and Miller Barber and Bob Goalby, when that tour first started, they used to pay their own way to press conferences to push the tour around. They paid for their hotel fares."

"So I feel good every time I'm around those guys and I have a tremendous amount of respect for all of them. Not only for what they are and what they stand for, but for what they have done for the game itself."
