publicans have been busy planning a May 30 forum for U.S. Senate candidates.

"I've been too wrapped up in that and I haven't had the time," said Whinnery, who is also working on U.S. Rep. Joe Knollenberg's re-election campaign. "I want to have one."

Whinnery said she'll try to secure a date for city hall soon.

The Democratic Club couldn't be reached for comment.

Previous years, the Republicans and the Dems have had their candidate forums at Farmington Hill City Hall. The League of Women Voters has its forum at Southwestern Oakland County Cable studios, which is cablecast live.

Interest is particularly low in this year's school election.

The lack of candidates could be one reason. Two seats are open with incumbents R. Jack Inch and Webb vying for both along with challenger Ken Stein.

Some speculate people might simply be voted out.

Many voted in the Proposal A election in March as well as the city elections in November. There was also a special election for a new library in August.

"I've heard utterly nothing about this race," Paros said, "and I don't know why."

ture, especially in their hands.

"It's happened a couple of times," Rajali said. "It doesn't hurt when you get hit, though."

Said Rajali, "Then we have impatient people who kick the table to set it off."

There was one of the more popular in the fourth annual exhibit, which drew students, parents and teachers alike to the auditorium hallway.

Students picked topics from a hot and wrote five to seven page reports in addition to preparing demonstrations. Further research included going to businesses and hospitals.

Some topics covered were Freon, fission and fusion and common elements. Several students also explored automotive-related subjects such as air bags, catalytic converters and lighting systems.

"Once they can explain complicated things to their teachers and their parents, they're quite proud," said teacher Beverly Schmitt.

Sophomores Monica Balash, Jenni Bodzin and Christina Khouri did a project on the pros and cons of Freon, which is a non-flammable gas used in refrigerators and aerosols.

"There are more cons than pros," said Balash, listing ill effects believed by some to be caused by Freon, including the depletion of the ozone.

Jeremy Dunn, Michael Redisch, Jason Frontier and Brad Steel researched the problem of mounting waste. Dunn said he found the topic enlightening.

"I learned a lot of things," he said. "The fact there's a lot of waste in America and that half of the landfills are closed. It's a larger problem than most Americans know about."

"You don't realize it until you do some research into the project."

Sophomores Duane Wilder, Brandon McKelley, Jaclyn Lossia and Amy St. Charles got a charge out of their project, which was on the types of visible light such as fluorescent, infrared and incandescent.

"The guys had fun with the electrical part," Lossia said. "They had fun shocking themselves."
