Two cable series offer lessons for little ones

BY SUZANNE GILL

Parents have a rare opportunity to preview a new series for children when Showtime presents two episodes of "Mrs. Piggle-Wiggle" Tuesday, June 7, in prime time.

Jean Stapleton stars in the 13-part series, developed by Shelley Duvall from a set of clever books written in the 1940s and '50s by Betty MacDonald. Mrs. Piggle-Wiggle is an eccentric matron (her husband is at sea) who uses her extraordinary set of hats to cure childhood maladies from lying to selfishness to pet-forgetting.

These hats hang on a leafy, talking hat tree played by Francis Bell.

Duvall exercises her usual casting wit with guests including Ed Begley Jr., Joan Cusack, Christopher Lloyd and Meshach Taylor. "Mrs. Piggle-Wiggle" airs weekly beginning Tuesday, June 14.

A special edition of "Adventures in Wonderland" airs Thursday, June 9, on The Disney Channel. Oscar winner Marlee Matlin plays April Hare, the March Hare's hearing-impaired cousin, who comes to Wonderland to teach everyone sign language after the Red Queen commands them all to be silent. For young children unacquainted with hearing impairments, this makes an upbeat introduction and includes useful information, such as the fact that the deaf cannot "hear" what is said when their backs are turned.
