

Individualistic, writer may act in nonconforming ways

GRAPHOLOGY PROFILES

LORENE GREEN

Dear Ms. Green, I am a right-handed 26-year-old. I am very interested in getting my handwriting analyzed.

I have been told that it is strange for someone who is right-handed to write with a back slant. Is this true? What exactly does this mean?

Thanks, R.G., Farmington Hills
Extensive studies have proven that the ratio of both right- and left-handed people with a back slant to their handwriting is about equal in number. Here is the most widely accepted research on back-slanted handwriting, and I invite you to examine it and make your own determinations: Back-slanted writers are often introspective with low emotional response. Rarely do they show what they are thinking or feeling at first glance. Many of them like keeping to themselves, remaining anonymous.

They are inclined to hold others at arm's length emotionally. This gives them a vantage point of control from which to operate. They, not others, are in charge of whether or not you will become friends. They are influenced more by their head than their heart. And often they perceive some hurt or rebuff from easy life. Movement to the left always carries an element of returning to self and security, rather than extending out into the world of risks and the unknown.

Our writer is a young woman who is individualistic and may act in ways that are unconventional and nonconforming. She was probably raised in a female-dominated home.

Early in her development, she wanted to be independent of home and society's dictates. This may have caused friction for those involved, so within her we see a struggle between her need for security and possibly a stronger need to follow her own star.

This handwriting style suggests intelligence and sophistication. She is a mature young woman, sensitive and subjective. She does not chase the limelight. Still she can be rather dominant at times, and she has the ability to direct and control. She knows what she wants and has the drive to make things pay off.

There is a directness to our writer. She adheres to a philosophy that is rational, pragmatic and to the point. In addition, she is prepared to take a stand for what she believes.

This young woman is goal-oriented and has a strong sense of purpose. Organizational skills are well developed. Mental efficiency cannot be missed. She knows how to discard the unnecessary and move right along with a task. Her determination helps her stay the course.

An active interest in the material, physical side of life is also here.

An awareness for form and proportion can be seen. I suspect art aptitude or some creative bent for her.

If you would like to have your handwriting analyzed in this newspaper write to Lorene C. Green, a certified graphologist, at 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia 48150.

Please use a full sheet of white, unlined paper, writing in the first person singular. Age, aptitudes, and handedness are all helpful.

And objective feedback is always welcomed.

Pickin's are good: Farmington Farmer's Market is held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturdays at the Village Commons parking lot in downtown Farmington on Grand River. Left: Mary Trevison of Farmington says she loves the plants and flowers offered by Massab at the market. Right: Carl Stitchek is back at the market again this year serving up piles of Michigan corn from Glenn Acres Farm.
