Strong fittingly compares her jewelry to tiny sculpture. The detail of the pieces gives them elegance. Complementing the material are the atones: pearl, amethyst, onyx, garnet and citrine, for example.

Sparkling druzzy crystals, black and white, resemble tiny galazies. Rose quarts looks like little architectural structures. Some stones contain swirls, oth-ers suggest small aquariums.

Much of Strong's jewelry is modular, inviting input from the wearer. Pendants and additions to earrings can be removed, re-placed or built on. Her system for connecting them is patented.

"The fact that you can change them around is limitless." When designing a piece, Strong sculpts it first (rather than sketching) and makes a cast, us-ing another ancient technique. She works through the two villag-es of Idar-Oberstien in Germany, renowned for jewelry, and cutter Brend Munsteiner.

"I don't work in two dimensions very well . . . I would have been a terrible painter."

Yellow gold is her favorite ma-

"Those are my colors. I love earth tones.
"I guess I'm painting in a way." Strong has been designing jewelry for 22 or 23 years. She had worked as a bench jeweler for 71/2

Call (810) 642-4795.

Her young daughter now likes to design jewelry.

"It tell her, 'Keep making jewelry.

"It tell her, 'Keep making jewelry if you want to go to college," one of her pieces, a rope chain with a pendant made from an ancient coin, featured in an exhibit at Sandra Collins in the control of the pieces. The control of the pieces o in Birmingham. Strong draws from the classics, using ancient techniques and motifs.
