The first good result of a playroomis the freedom and peace it gives to, the entire family. The children have a place where they legitimately belong, to which they may be sent when family councils make their presence undesirable. They also have a placefor their playthings, which will ceaseto litter the house at large. As soon as they have a room of their own they may be taught to understand something of the rule of mine and meals in the dining room and he sleeps in a bedroom-probably shared with someone elso, but in neither of these has be any possessions or any interest except enting and sleeping. The living room is a precarious place to start anything in, as it is uncertain when it will be needed by some one to start anything in, as it is uncertain when it will be needed by some one to start anything in, as it is uncertain when it will be needed by some one, play is sure to disturb him. He has no place to do anything. When, in desperation, he takes one he becomes an annoyance.

The ideal playroom has nothing, in it except what is needed. It is a room that grows. If children are young, have whitewashed whils are best. They can be decorated to suit the varying fancies of the children, and a fresh coat of wash each year will at face for the next stage of their development. When they are old enough to want wallaper, let them select it. Let it be the cheapest possible, so that it may be renewed at a small cost. As for pictures, the unframed prints will satisfy aesthetic tastes for many a year, and when the desire for framed finished pictures comes the fewor for passe-pariout will come also and give as incepensive method of one carpels are necessary, and it any event washable rugs are the best, floor covering. An unstalued table of white wood, a good-stace closest and a couple of chairs of the right height are the only furnishings needed. The toys of the children will make the room complets, and extra furnishings will come as the room grows.—Harper's Bazar.

Precaution in Kitchen.

In many homes grave cases of poisoning have arisen through a careless disregard for the cleanliness of the cooking utensits or of their perfect condition. As soon as a copper saucepan shows signs of being at all worn it should be retinned, and in any case nothing of an acid nature should be allowed to renain in it while coolling. The same with regard to zinc and lead vessels, which are unsade for cooking purposes. These of tin. seed, iron or mickel are the safest to seed, iron or mickel are the safest to better to use a wooden spoon than one of metal when attring milk or soups, and that before using bakingtins you should grosse them inside thoroughly either with butter or lard, in order to prevent them from burnling it is well to take the precaution of sprinkling the sholves of the oven with salt. BETTER NOT CRITICIZE

Make a good put paste or light, lasky pie crust, roll thin, and cut it lato squares. Take as many white unions as there are to be guests and bell them in fair water until they commence to grow tender. Remove, lirain and let cool a bir, then carefully cut out the center and fill the space with a half of a country same, butter, proper and sait; fold each lide a square of the pastry, adding as much tomato dressing as it will hold.
