I am very anxious to know your opinion of my handwriting. Thank you.

C.Z., Livonia

Today's handwriting is small and legible. I would like to quote from "Advanced Graphology" by the late Betty Link regarding this size: "Small writing is characteristic of those who have the ability to concentrate, pay attention to details, and exercise a keenness of mentality. They may also be somewhat inhibited, ry to remain unnoticed, or be modest about calling attention to themselves.

Scientists, bookkeepers and re-search workers are among those whose writings usually are

Each one must be considered within the framework of the entire specimen.

Among other things, today's writer has a strong need to please others and to be acceptable to them. She is kind and giving in her interactions with people. She lives by a code of behavior that is proper and she dislikes rudeness in others.

By nature she is a modest person. She does not require the limelight to be happy.

This young woman is inclined to be discouraged at this time. She is also self-critical. She is a good worker, always putting forth her best effort. However, she seems to consider anything short of perfection unacceptable. Catenship, she does not realize there is a tremendous difference between high standards and perfection. It is like the impossible dream and can never be achieved.

She has a need to eacape from looking back, but is also cauquite making experience at one time and has not been able to totally remained and the make the making and the she had a trauntage and the she may have had a trauntage appeals of the she may have had a trauntage of the she may have had a trauntage of the totally remained to totally remained to totally remained to totally remained to the she may have had a trauntage of the s

Her concentration is well-devel-oped. She likes to focus her undi-vided attention on one thing at a time. Interruptions and distrac-tions can be upsetting, I think she would prefer to work in small areas. Her balliwick would be neat and tidly, with a place for ev-erything and things in their desig-nated places. She is mindful of details and tends to them.
