A very special young woman begins to move into focus in today's left-slanted handwriting. This alant was never taught in American schools. From this fact we know it is a change that also consider the reasons for doing it. Research tells us that left-slanters have usually been ruised in a strict atmosphere where much, possibly even perfection, was expected of them. When we combine this with the total picture of her handwriting, we begin to see someone who perceived some rejection as an ewas growing up. Outwardly she learned to control her emotions and may appear reserved to others. Inside, however, there is emotionia activity at work, I believe.

Our writer forms friendships carefully because she has been hurt in the pest. She seeks approval from her relationships to compensate for this deprivation. Once a friendship develops she can be loyal and devoted. At times, however, she may feel a little jealous of outside friendships. Having been exposed to considerable criticism our writer is quite sensitive to criticism of a personal nature. She may even expect it when none is intended. Compliments would be music to her ears, especially from a certain mals.

There is worry and some mood fluctuation in this handwriting. At times she is friendlier than at other times. This can be confusing to those who do not know what she may be experiencing.

Ostensibly, she lives with ambivalent feelings. She does not want to be held back by past roots. Often she has an inner struggle between reaching out to others and taking care of her own organization for individuals desiring personal involvement in the leadership and improving of their communities: "As A Group, We Can Achieve What Individuals Cannot De Alone." The major Children-Priority One.

In this kind of organizational set up, much fellowship and inspiration come about as by products of working for the community. Kiwanians, using their experience and leadership, time and love, bring comfort to those who need them the most.

needs. This contradiction can cause indecision for her. Her desire to move into the world and be helpful is confirmed in many ways (both from the letter and in her handwriting) where she reaches out with love and caring. This can also bring needed henefits by way of approval and appreciation. Someone once said, "The scent always remains on the hand that gives the rose."
