MEDICAL RESEARCH

ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

Alzheimer's Patients Sought for New Drug Study

Everyone has some special memories—the day a child was born, a graduation, perhaps a wedding day. Imagine if you or someone you love couldn't recall these significant events. That's the fate of some 4 million Americans who suffer from Alzheimer's disease.

This degenerative condition gradually steals such memories from these individuals. It leaves them unable to recall friends, family or even their own names and addresses—the very stuff that makes us who we are.

A study is under way at Sinal Clinical Neuroscience Center in West Bloomfield to investigate a drug researchers hope will help Alzheimer's patients.

A family member or patient caregiver should call 1-800-567-2585, to inquire about participation. Participants must be over age 45 and must have a history of at least one year's duration with memory impairment. They should not suffer from strokes, epilepsy, insulin-dependent diabetes, brain tumors or active peptic ulcers.

A caregiver must be able to supervise the administration of study medication twice daily and accompany the patient on periodic visits to the study center. All examinations and medications will be provided free of charge to participants for the duration of the study.
