

HANDWRITING ANALYSIS

Writer focuses on precision and accuracy

GRAPHOLOGY PROFILES

LORENE GREEN

I am right-handed and I always print rather than write in cursive. I hope that printing does not hinder your analysis.

I often hesitate to analyze printing because the research lags far behind that of cursive writing. However, this letter was like a magnet drawing me back to it several different times. So I finally

Dear Lorene, I enjoy your column and have always wondered what my handwriting says about me. I am 32 years old and have three children.

I am a full-time mother now and recently left the field of engineering.

decided to analyze it. I hope the writer will furnish me with objective feedback so that I can learn more about this type of printing. Actually, I consider this printscript since many of the letters are connected to the letters that follow. And several of these connections are creative and time-saving. This points out her ability to innovate and create. Her finely honed intelligence cannot be misused.

Our writer's focus is on accuracy and precision in all she does. She has been programmed for error-free performance. She continues to expect perfection of herself to avoid criticism.

Basically, she is afraid of criticism that might come if she falls short of her ideal performance. She tends to react defensively to criticism, especially when it involves appearance.

A self-disciplined, conscientious and goal-oriented person is evident in this writing. Give her a task to perform and you can rest assured it will be done to meet her high standards. When she makes a commitment, she can be counted on to honor it.

Well-organized would also describe our writer. Efficiency and order have much appeal. She likes things neatly in their places. I wouldn't be surprised to learn she writes out a list of the things she wants to accomplish each day. And when she says she will meet you at a certain time, she is there promptly.

She functions best in a structured atmosphere. She has limited patience with schedules that do not work out according to her plans. Raising three youngsters, however, may present daily challenges to her somewhat compulsive lifestyle.

Prior to taking any action, she considers the consequences. She exercises control over herself, her emotions, desires and needs. She is inclined to do and say that which is most effective and efficient. Responses are the result of a conscious thought process. Control like hers would be an asset in emergency situations.

Ostensibly, there is a lack of adaptability to our writer. She will check and double check to be certain everything is handled correctly. When things don't go as planned, she may become unglued. Recently, I read something that "Blessed are the flexible for they shall not be bent out of shape."

This young woman is open-minded and tolerant of other people's views. This would make her a good listener and probably ingratiates her to others.

Please use a full sheet of white, unlined paper, writing in the first person singular. Age, handedness and full signature are helpful. Objective feedback is welcome.
