BY CHRISTINE VENEMA SPECIAL WAITER

If you cook for only one or two, you have plenty of company. Statistics show that more than half of the households in the United States now consist of one or two persons. Even though aingles and twosomes now outnumber families with two adults and one or more children, most cookbooks and supermarkets still gear to the needs of larger households.

For many singles, the solution is to grab a burger at a local fastfood restaurant, pop a packaged dinner into the oven, microwave or cook a big meel and eat leftovers for what seems like forever.

of this can be expensive and/or boring.

Cooking for one or two is not difficult, and may offer some advantages over cooking for larger families.

With only yourself, and one other person to please, you show more freedom to experiment with new foods, flavors and recipes. Eating schedules can be more flexible when you do not have to serve meals according to other people's schedules.

In the supermarket, small cans stale or spoils before it is used.

However, singles and twosomes
can use some family-sized food items to their advantage. For instance, buy regular sizes of bread, rolls and pastries and keep them in the freezer. Then remove portions as they are needed. Be sure to store the bread products in moisture/vapor-proof wrappings
and containers to avoid freezer and containers to avoid burn.
Buy frozen vegetables in plastic whenever possible. This makes it whenever possible. This makes it easy to remove the amount needoff or a meal and put the rest back in the freezer.

You may want to buy a cookbook that is specifically written for one or two. Collecting recipes that can be easily decreased by halves or thirds is another option. Look for simple recipes that are easy to cook or put together from prepared ingredients.
When cooking more elaborate meals for one or two, make foods in large batches as a time saver. Then label and freeze the individual portions for use later. When packages of meat, cheese and produce come in large sizes, do not be afraid to speak up. Most grocers would be happy to pack-age what you need into smaller portions.

Tips for packing food to go

There is nothing worse than food poisoning to spoil a wonderful vacation! "With food, safety should be given first consideration," said Sylvia Treitman, home economist for the Michigan State University Extension Service of Oakland County.

"Some foods travel better than others for long periods of time." Some foods travel better than others for long periods of time. The foods, such as custards and cream-filled deaserts, are best left at home."

Sandwiches, fresh fruits, carrot and celeys ticks may be the safest old standbys. They are easy to pack, easy to eat, easy to keep cold before you pack it.

B Pack ice chest full to kelled things longer. Use plenty of ice grot top of food.

B For long trips, a plastic Eachest is a good investment, affect keeps food longer than a plastic foam chest.
