REVIEW

Kvalvaag who plays the leader elf, Morta. Kvalvaag, who recently returned from a national tour of the Broadway musical, "The Secret Garden," has implish-like gestures and movements allowing him to perfectly portray an elf. In addition, his solo, "I Bless this Home," is sung softly and sweetly, and adds just the right touch.

Another top-notch performer is Laura Haeblerle who plays Loretta Le Pointe, a ballerina and client of the shoemaker. Haeblerle delivers her lines enthusiastically as she shows her fine dancing form on her toes.

Two others are not easily forgotten. Nick Nerio and Laurie Boloven, as the shoemaker and his wife, are cute, quite humorous and "sickly" lovey-dovey.

The set, which depicts the shoemaker's home and workshop, provides various levels on which the actors perform. The sneaky elves retreat to the orchestra pit when hiding from the Cobblestones; the towns people enter and deliver their lines on an entry and stairs above the workshop, and cast members run off the stage and through the audience. These varying "stages" keep the action moving and help the audience feel a part of the performance.

Also of interest are the costumes, which help portray "The Shoemaker and the Elves" as a fairy tale, or at least something out of the norm.

A variety of hats from bonnets to sailor hats to elves headpieces that fall to stay on the little heads, are the most predominant feature of the colorful costumes. Like the hats, the costumes are not from any specific period, although the play is billed as taking place "a long time ago."

For instance, Mayor Clankbottle's attire is "Roaring '20s" flashing with "flour" plaid sportcoat and sequined box tie.

The shoemaker wears a velvet waistcoat with knickers, something definitely suitable for Victorian-era royalty, but not the "poor" character he portrays. But then again, this is a fairy tale.

"The Shoemaker and the Elves" is entertaining. It's a nice way to end the summer or start the school year.

The bright and buoyant cast of "The Shoemaker and the Elves" teach all a valued lesson when performing this well-known tale, a musical adaptation of the classic Brothers Grimm tale.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive" is demonstrated best by unselfish Lockhart and Matilda Cobblestone (the shoemaker and his wife) who help out a number of townsfolk in the city of Clankbottle.

This musical tale begins with the Cobblestones helping an elderly woman by supplying her with a pair of shoes to cover her bare feet. This senior turns out to be a "magical" person who rewards the caring couple's kindness by granting them five helpful and funny elves who create wondrous shoes in the wee hours of the morning.

"The Shoemaker and the Elves" cast members are students of the Marquis Theatre camp. While many stupendous thespians are found in this theatrical production, one of note is Lara
