

FINE ARTS

Stop by the park to see 'Installments II'

PERSPECTIVES

You still have time to see Installments II, an outdoor sculpture exhibit at Municipal Park in Rochester.

The small-scale (five-artist) show of large-scale works continues to Sept. 16 in the park, north of William University, between Ludlow and Main. Each artist was inspired by the natural setting of the park. The pieces are arranged around a small lake; it's a restful place to contemplate the works. You can get up close and view the works from different angles.

"Industrial Haiku," Ari Kamibouris of Southfield has displayed a poem on pieces of scrap metal that seem to rise out of the ground at different levels, like keys of a musical instrument being struck.

Raymond Katz of Pontiac presents "Chime Tower," a dark piece with long, slender chimes waiting to be stirred by the wind or by viewers. It attracts the ears as well as the eyes. "Spirit Boat" by James Lutomaki of Royal Oak is shaped like a boat — which also resembles an eye. A sense of the religious and historic is conveyed as it suggests journeys past, present and future.

Kathleen Arkes of Marine City displays "Sea of Innocence," unspooled faces of children arranged like flowers. In "Womadic," Robert Tammara of Fraser shows a structure like a hull that is covered with animal skin and performed with tiny holes. The holes, which form a mini constellation, display different patterns as the sun passes overhead.
