Church music camp attracts kids

The first-annual music camp at Prince of Peace Luthersn Church in Farmington Hills attracted more than 25 children in grades four through 12 for a full week of clucation and praise under the thems of "Through Music, Knowing Him and Making Him Known."

"The children learned the fun-damentals of singing, were intro-duced to hand chimes and discov-ered contemporary Christian and seppi music, all in one action-porared week," said Cheri Fish, the church's director of music who organized and led the music

In addition to these musical experiences, the children performed the musical "Oh, Jonah" at the camp's closing service attended by the congregation. Prince of Peace's Pater Philip Traynka led the atudents in opening and closing worship, as well as a baptismal remembrance service where they were able to renew their baptismal yows, Fish said.

The church's organist, Mary Whitmore, headed the vocal training portion of the camp. She was joined by Monique Nunes, of St. John Lutheran Church in Dericit, who led the children in stirring renditions of contemporary gospel music, and Nancy Vogl, of Prince of Peace, who taught the annya.

Another highlight of the week was a trip to Concordia College, Ann Arbor, where the group was treated to educational presentations by the college's music department.

The enthusiasm of the students as annexer all week long, and was apparent all week long, and the experience left the children with much anticipation for next
