FAMILY ROOM

Farmington in the early days

What was rural life like in what is now Farmington Hills back in the 30s and 40s? That is when I grew up here, just across the street from where I now live.

Things were far different from what they are now. Life was physically difficult, but when you have experienced nothing else, it is taken for granted. The old cement block house my dad built still stands on the northeast corner of Power and Colfax. It's been remodeled several times over and looks better than ever, now with central air conditioning and fiberglass siding covering the cement blocks.

Colfax has gone through some name changes over the years. It was 8½ mile, then Clark, then Colfax. Power Road was Powers Road, with the "s" being dropped in recent years to better reflect the name of the founder of Farmington.

the farm or was a kid, we didn't differentiate between Farmington and Farmington Township. It was all just Farmington to us. This end of Power Road, which ends at Colfax, was just two sandy tracks between here and the Farmington cut-off, which is now an expressway, with Folsom Street running along its south side and Freedom Road along its north side. Those streets didn't exist then. Nine Mile Road cut across the cut-off near Maple Road. Nine Mile hasn't changed much in the stretch between Power and Grand River.

On the west side of Power south of the ex-

A Farmington Hills doctor specializes in geriatric medicine and she comes to the job with a different perspective than most.

Dr. Kathleen Murphy, a geriatric's specialist at Henry Ford Medical Center in West Bloomfield, treats the fastest-growing segment of the population and the Farmington Hills physician approaches her patients with a personal insight on illness.

Consider that the 85 and older group will be tripling in the next 15 years and imagine the tremendous impact this will have on the medical profession.

Murphy comes to the job with a special perspective. She was diagnosed in 1988 with retinitis pigmentosa and a year later she learned she had multiple sclerosis.

At 43 she has two children Frances, 10 and Charlie 8.

"There's a spiritual part of me that's being developed," she said. "I have to deal with my own stuff. I've have to deal with my own stuff. I'm not saying that I do it well. I do it and I learn from my patients. I enjoy listening to them and about how they cope or why they cope the way they do. I identify with their weaknesses, their strengths and their failings."

Listening is an important task when dealing with patients with chronic illnesses, she added. And it's often not a matter of curing the person,, but rather caring about the issues they face.

For instance, she makes it her job to understand her patients' wishes on how they want to be treated in various circumstances.

Special Care: Dr. Kathleen Murphy looks at patient Nannie Lambdin's legs with nurse Kathleen White and Nannie's daughter Carol Paul looking on.

"There are often open ended questions people ask you about what if. If they don't bring it up, I often start it. Geriatrics is a continuum. A 66-year-old is different from a 75-year-old and a 76-year-old is different from an 85-year-old. At 85, they start to come to terms with the end of life."

Patients usually know what they want and often need to talk about it. "What a person wants to do is up to them," she added sitting in her office. She pauses regularly to answer questions about medication and other er care issues from doctors and hospice workers.

"I can give patients my opinion and I want them to know all their options," Murphy continued. "There are things that we can offer at every stage of your life. Many people are a lot smarter than I am. They've lived longer."

Some of the decisions include whether or not the patient should be treated in a hospital or not. Hospital care doesn't always cure people and sometimes it makes them worse, Murphy said. And the same is true for medication.

"To me, a geriatric provider must understand the basic principles of terminal or supportive care — the prevention and treatment of pain to best serve the frailest elderly," Murphy said.

Hospice or non-curative care is offered in the continuum of quality care for suffering or dying patients with malignant or non-malignant terminal illness.

"If death with dignity is to be a
