In her new position, she will service a number of accounts, including the agency's health care, food service and non-profit clients.

Turn on red prohibited onto Farmington Road

Eastbound Shiawassee motorists who want to turn onto southbound Farmington Road need the green light.

Otherwise, they could get a ticket. Farmington City Council, upon the recommendation of the city's Traffic and Safety Board, OK'd designating the southwest corner a no-turn-on-red area.

A no-turn-on-red sign was already posted before the council's action.

"The sign got ahead of the ordinance," City Manager Frank Lauff said.

Several residents complained about traffic safety at the corner, city officials said. Eastbound traffic would turn right onto southbound Farmington Road, which interfered with westbound Shiawassee traffic turning left in the same direction.

There is a left-turn indicator on westbound Shiawassee and southbound Farmington, which is needed to prevent traffic backups down the hill.

Seven accidents involving left turns have occurred at the intersection since 1993, according to Traffic and Safety Board statistics.
