Beckerleg said he expects the city and church to work on guidelines.

"That's what the court has told us to do," he said. "I don't think that will be a problem."

He said the city council would be briefed on the decision and decide whether to take the appeal any further.

Church favored: The doors of The Jesus Center will remain open to the homeless thanks to a recent decision by the state Court of Appeals.
