

Mac Divott's Wood and Putter changes image of driving ranges

Remember when driving ranges used to be beat up little shacks with worn, green mats populated by a few good, old boys telling each other what they were doing wrong? Well, Mac Divott's Wood and Putter, 3500 Edgar in Royal Oak, changes all that.

Owner Andy Giovannetti and his wife Chris have put together a true full service golf center. From 40 outdoor tees, 10 covered and heated tees, 14 lesson tees, sand and chipping areas, putting green and now grass tees coming later this summer, golfers can practice every facet of the game. The attractive clubhouse features an expanded Pro Shop. There's even a patio to grab a cold drink and relax on before, during, or after you practice.

"We're trying to bring the best golf center to Oakland County," Giovannetti said. The attendance on most nights attests to the job Andy and his wife Chris are doing. In fact, Detroit Monthly last year rated Mac Divott's the top facility for people to meet. As Andy said, "We make it very comfortable and attractive for them here."

Open seven days a week beginning in March, MacDivott's offers private and group lessons from three PGA teaching Pros, a great selection of clubs, shoes and accessories and a practice area for every part of your game.

While he is, of course, delighted with his business's success, Giovannetti does have one regret. The former real estate developer's own golf game is on the decline. "I don't have time to play anymore," he said.
