

Crittenton Hospital focuses on progress for patients, staff and community

Although Crittenton Hospital in Rochester has a long history based on a Detroit woman's hospital, it is always striving to focus on bringing its patients, staff and community the best it can in health care and health facilities.

1996 is no exception. This year Crittenton will open its Radiation Oncology Center, a joint venture with The Detroit Medical Center's Harper Hospital. Located at Crittenton, the new center will offer radiation therapy to cancer patients.

The hospital will also unveil its new 8th and 9th floors to the existing East Tower. These floors will add another 32,500-square-feet to the 29-year-old Rochester hospital. The space will be used for a 37-bed medical/surgical unit and a 23-bed critical care unit.

Patients and clients are enjoying having their Crittenton doctors close to them at the hospital. They only have to go as far as the new four-story medical office building, which opened last May. It's located just to the west of the main hospital building and houses about 26 physicians, a pharmacy and a medical equipment company.
