Professional organizer straightens up with tips for time, health savings

Seniors are no exception to the increasing frustration of not enough time or space. Health concerns and smaller living space or too much living space contribute to the problem.

It is no secret we are all working harder, longer and faster, so we can keep from falling off the edge and succumbing to all the standard ailments, stress and heart disease that can befall us when we don't pay attention to ourselves.

Ann Savell, an organization consultant and author of the book "How to Organize Your Home or Die Trying," will be at the Farmington Hills Senior Center on Tuesday, April 30 at 10 a.m. for a special presentation.

Savell is an experienced speaker, trainer and consultant. In her work as an organizing and space planning professional, she is committed to giving clients and audiences the practical solutions and insights so that they can live more pro-actively, thereby increasing their level of achievement. Her background in business and education also gives her a unique perspective on the organizational skills needed to do more with less.

There is a $2 fee. To register, call 810-473-1830 or stop by the senior reception desk.

Today we not only own more stuff we have more expectations and choices of things to do. There are grandchildren to babysit or take part in activities with. Friends to go to lunch with or exercise classes. We all want to participate in more fulfilling activities but find our time limited by clutter.

"Stuff" has a nasty habit of needing attention. It has to be cleaned, polished, scrubbed, stored, maintained, and worst of all, insured. It costs us money because it takes up space and robs us of time, of which we have too little today.

The solution can only be found when it becomes such a headache that we realize we have better things to do with our space and time and decide to let go.

The goal is to lighten the load and simply your life slowly and gradually.

The presentation is sponsored by Lesley M. Delgado, president/owner of Spencer Personnel.
