Make time for '8 Seconds'

By LEANNE RUGERS
STAFF WRITER

The life and career of the Oklahoma cowboy is the subject of a fairly standard biopic "8 Seconds" directed by John Avildsen of "Rocky" fame.

From the time Lane Frost was a little kid, his life was tied up with the rodeo. His event was bull riding—the same as his father, a retired rodeo champion himself. The film opens in 1968 with home movies of a little boy dressed in chaps and a cowboy hat riding on a sheep.

After competing in teen rodeos, Frost, played by Luke Perry, joins two buddies to start traveling the professional rodeo circuit. Frost is a nice guy. Unlike the other cowboys, he always stops to sign autographs and talk to the kids who hang around after competitions. "The rodeo isn't about money. It's about doing your best and helping others do their best," says Frost.

A nice performance by Perry helps Frost from becoming a parody of a clean living cowboy. He meets future wife Kellie, a champion barrel racer, at a rodeo. She isn't impressed with bull riders. "Little men, big egos," observes Kellie, played by Cynthia Geary.

"Things are going pretty well for Frost after his marriage including his first national championship in 1987. A lifelong frustration and source of personal conflict has been his relationship with his father who can't ever seem to be satisfied with son's accomplishments.

Success also takes its toll on the Frost marriage as Lane is driven to try and impress his father with greater glory on the rodeo circuit and through the related lucrative merchandising. Kellie and Lane work out their problems and a kind of peace is reached with his father before the film ends in 1989 with Lane's death in a rodeo accident. "8 Seconds," which takes its title from the amount of a time a rider must stay on the bull to receive a score in competition, is a well-acted film.

The film avoids the stereotypical big event to culminate the film. To an extent that also works against the film. The film is tremendously low key, even when it comes to the rodeo competitions. But you have to give the film credit for presenting Frost as a realistic man—a basically level-headed guy who has to deal with some personal relationships like pretty everybody else.

The supporting cast is also good including Stephen Baldwin as Frost's buddy and fellow rodeo champion Tuff D., a rowdy mirror image of Frost.
