FOCUS ON PHOTOGRAPHY

Wander off for wonderful photos

MONTE
NAGLER

When planning your travels this year, try to include a "wandering" trip. I do them often and they sure pay off with rewarding photographs.

What do I mean by a "wandering" trip? It's one where there's no set itinerary, no set plans, just getting there and wandering or hanging loose for the duration of the trip. It's not even knowing where you might be from day to day or where you might be spending the evening. Sound fun and exciting? It is! And your photographs will be all the better.

Whether it's a local photography trip for a few days or an extended vacation overseas, wandering is the way to go.

My wife and I spent five weeks in Europe this way and doing so sure compensated us with good fun and good photos. We had our personal belongings, camera gear, a rental car and no itinerary. I remember leaving the Frankfurt Airport and asking my wife, "Well, which way do you want to go?" We played it one day at a time deciding which direction or which country we wanted to head toward.

Our wanderings took us to nine countries, mostly visiting small villages. This way, we saw the real Europe, met the real people and got the real photographs.

At times we literally stumbled onto picturesque subjects — a charming village, a delightful person willing to pose for the camera or an off-the-beaten path street scene. Bed and breakfast proprietors, despite the language barrier, were most helpful in pointing out little-known areas for taking great shots.

One of my favorite stops of the trip was a quaint village called Turckheim nestled near the German border. We happened onto it quite by accident. And how enchanting it was: cobblestone streets, colorful flowers on window ledges, storks nesting on tiled rooftops — a photographer's delight. The photograph shown here was one of many taken in this captivating French town.

You'll be amazed at what you'll encounter on a wandering trip. You'll have a great time and you're sure to bring home many memorable and gratifying photographs.
