

Look for EPA symbol on air conditioners

If you're in the market for a new heat pump or central air conditioner, add the government's new Energy Star symbol to your list of things to look for.

Why? Because the Energy Star logo means the unit is at least 20 percent more efficient than the products currently meeting minimum federal government standards.

Experts at the Trane Home Comfort Institute explain that, in terms of cooling, only heat pumps and central air conditioners that have a Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratio (SEER) of 12 or higher qualify for the Energy Star Label.

The SEER is a measure of a unit's cooling efficiency. The higher the SEER, the higher the efficiency. The higher the efficiency, the lower the energy bills.

Then U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) created the Energy Star program to help increase the efficiency of heat pumps and central air conditioning being installed in homes. Doing so will dramatically reduce the nation's energy consumption.

It will also help utilities offset their peak loads and avoid constructing costly new power plants. Homeowners gain the added benefit of saving money because more efficient equipment costs less to operate.

To make the high efficiency models easier to purchase, EPA is offering financing assistance through the special Energy Star loans from participating banks and other financial institutions. The loans have lower interest rates, longer payment periods or both.

The Trane Home Comfort Institute recommends that you ask your local financial institution about Energy Star loans when you ask your air conditioning dealer about Energy Star models.
