TEN ACHIEVEMENTS FOR ONE FAILURE

Most employers have some form of personnel appraisal program to review an employee's progress with the company. The employee's supervisor will meet with the employee to discuss their accomplishments and/or failures at this time and evaluate their usefulness to the company. It has always seemed that it takes approximately ten achievements done well to make up for one failure. I guess life is sort of that way; we tend to forget people's good works or virtuous qualities and instead focus on their shortcomings. We should keep in mind the old saying: "if a person doesn't make mistakes, they probably aren't doing anything." It is a blessing to know that God does not rent like him. Our Father in Heaven always loves us even though we are not perfect. God's word, the Bible, tells us that He will never leave us or forsake us. Perhaps, we should try to remember a person's good works more than his failure.
