back-up band." Drummer Greg DeGuglielmo, who has recorded with guitarist Bob Greco, and Eddie Brickell and the New Bohemians' bassist Brad Houser; veteran guitarist Scott Murawski; and banjo player Gordon Stone, who has been nominated in 1995 and 1996 as an emerging artist of the year by the International Bluegrass Musicians Association, round out his band.

When booking the artists for the event, Siglin said he tries to vary the music as much as possible.

"We try to put a storyteller or something like that in there, a non-musical type act. This year we have Les Barker, who's English. He's a comic poet-storyteller and he's the emcee. We try to get some traditional music and some instrumental virtuoso. Aly Bain and Phil Cunningham would certainly fill that on all ends. David Bromberg is a virtuoso guitar player," Siglin said.

The younger acts like Martin Sexton, Sawyer Werner, Patty Griffin are really strong acts. Dan Bern is phenomenal. Those four acts are aimed at the college audience. Actually, they're aimed at anybody."

Many artists like Nanci Griffith have gotten their start at the folk festival. An agent sent Griffith's tape to Siglin about 12 years ago and he was so smitten with it that he booked her to play the eighth festival after another act canceled. "She flew down here and did a set and had a huge following in Ann Arbor almost immediately. She headlined the festival four years ago and again this year. She's gotten very, very popular all the way across the country."

This year first-timers Griffin and Bern could very well be in the same boat. The angelic-voiced Griffin, who performed a sold-out show with Billy Mann at the 7th House in Pontiac Aug. 6, has had a moderate amount of success with her single "Every Little Bit" from her A&M album "Living With Ghosts." Bern, described as "topical-political-poetical-sarcastic-punk-folk," will come to town to promote his self-titled debut album for Sony/WORX records due out March 4. He has been called "the next Bob Dylan." That doesn't at all faze the Mount Vernon, Iowa, native. "I'm not the first one that people have called 'the next Bob Dylan.' I think it does two things. It makes people more interested and less interested. If I heard that about somebody, I'd come looking for a reason not to like the guy. Hopefully, people will like it," said the 31-year-old Shahn.

school had to wait, but he went on to create thousands of artworks during his life. His enthusiasm carried him through. He'd be at his drawing table for 16 or 17 hours when he wanted to get something down," said Bryson Shahn.

Ben Shahn eventually attended New York University, City College of New York, and the National Academy of Design with financing earned from his lithography trade. After the stock market crashed in 1929, he joined the staff of the Social Skills Division of the Resettlement Administration, later known as the Farm Security Administration, to document economic conditions around the country. He and other photographers such as Dorothea Lange and Walker Evans documented struggling families in front of their rundown houses in order to gain support for the Roosevelt administration's resettlement and make-work programs.

During World War II, Shahn designed posters for the Office of War Information and then later for the Political Action Committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, for which he worked for nominal pay because he believed in labor's cause. In 1947, a major retrospective of Shahn's work was shown at the Museum of Modern Art. By 1964, he'd received international recognition when he and Abstract Expressionist Willem de Kooning were chosen to represent the U.S. at the Venice Biennale. In 1966, Harvard University named whose album was produced by Chuck Plotkin who worked with Dylan and Bruce Springsteen.

Bromberg, on the other hand, is a veteran of the Ann Arbor Folk Festival. He has since curtailed his activities as a performing artist to make, buy and sell violins but will make a special appearance at the festival.

"I stopped performing quite a few years ago," Bromberg said via telephone from his Chicago-area home. "But when the Siglin asked me to do this, I thought this was something different."

Siglin has seen the Ann Arbor Folk Festival evolve during the past 20 years from intimate gatherings at the Power Center and Michigan Theater to jam-packed crowds at the 4,000-seat Hill Auditorium.

The demographics of the crowds at the folk festival and the 32-year-old Ark have changed as well.

Institution. "Ben Shahn was one of our very first supporters. He came on the board with Margaret Mead and Buckminster Fuller. To help finance the opening of the museum in 1965, Shahn created four drawings of abolitionist Frederick Douglass which were then made into prints. He signed 1,000 of them to help the museum first located in the residence of Frederick Douglass," said Robbins, founder and director emeritus of the National Museum of African Art donated to the Smithsonian in 1979.

"In his work, Ben Shahn combines biblical values with a certain whimsy and also his lithography training. He had a wonderful hand, a very expressive way like the way Paul Klee did." University of Michigan sculpture professor John Rush never met Shahn but concurs with Robbins about the importance of the Social Realist's work.

"Shahn's art expresses the struggle of mankind," said professor John Rush. "The show is dynamite. It's particularly appropriate since 9 to 10 of the works deal directly with Martin Luther King and the voter registration movement and coincides with Martin Luther King's birthday and Black History Month. But broader than that it deals with the subject of injustice. Shahn was very much involved in using his art to bring social causes to the public. He dealt with American labor causes and the civil rights movement and felt very strongly and passionately about it."
