

is for the most part to people who can afford to pay for such delicacies. The poorest classes in Europe eat the yields of our wheat and corn fields and if we could not sell our wheat and corn at the prices we are getting, they would be obliged to pass them by and eat rice or some other food staple that could be obtained at prices within their means. With apples, however, the situation is very different. Fancy apples are sold at prices that are out of the reach of the masses to alien shores, each apple neatly wrapped in its individual piece of paper, must perforce demand good prices and consequently—thus far the only good thing that has happened—cheap apples, among the wealthy, are scarce. For example, in the market for the grape for apple growing continues, we shall be producing so many apples of the poorer grades that our orchardists will in self-defense have to seek a market abroad for the poorer or at least the cheaper grades of apples.

When one is told that you are required to pay as high as twenty or twenty-five cents

But it would be a great mistake to convey the impression that it is only the apples from Oregon and Washington which are freighted through over land and sea to win prizes at the world's great exhibitions. The shipping port in the world is Watsonville, California, and countless apples have gone forth as silent messengers from the great orchards of the middle west and particularly from the position as a fountain head of the stream of apples that annually overspreads the world. The most famous apple growing region in the east—the picturesque Albemarle highlands of old Virginia—has nearly always been a source of supply for the menaced foreigner. From this historic region of the Old Dominion come the famous Albemarle pippins which bring prices ranging up to $10 a barrel and which are such favorite members of the royal family have had time to time many interesting and amusements when going about in disguise. They are able to escape the little while with the royal family. The royal family usually find them, and to enjoy a degree of freedom welcome to them.

George Prince of Wales had many times in different parts of London in disguise, which enabled his majesty obtain a close insight into the different ways of life of many of his subjects. The Weekly says:

One of the most interesting adventures King George has had in disguise was a visit to the Strand some years ago. At that time he was on an occasion when there was an unusual pressure of heavy goods traffic. The then duke of York, who was at that time a member of the royal household. Both were dressed in the garb of common men who were waiting in the yard for a midnight on the way to the night shift if the work was specially required.

A few of the railway officials were aware of the king's party, and standing among

The rest walked out of the yard except the duke of York, who was sent out a little while later by the railway. The latter had stood by his royal highness the foreman should have selected the king's party, but he was not aware of the identity of the prince, but had been instructed not to take on the two sides whom the railway officials would have been the king's party. The most adventures as the king in disguise.

Some years after her marriage the queen made a series of expeditions abroad to visit the poor people. She was then as an ordinary lady visitor, her husband was then the present bishop of London. The queen also a member of the poor people in Birmingham, Manchester and Liverpool in the guise of a nursing sister, which enabled her majesty to go to the yard and see the work of the railway officials subjected to any rough or unpleasant treatment, for the sisters are almost always treated with respect even by the roughest of the workmen.

a broad, flat, nearly oval head and body, and a tall something like that possessed by the man of fortification with a helmet. The head is covered with a sort of armor and it can only feel the way to the water by means of the antennae. When the fish is when feeding. But the real curiosity about this fish is the fact that it carries its own store of batteries with it on all its travels. The fish has a number of recharging the thousands of little cells when they become exhausted, using its power over and over again. There are really two batteries. They are located where one can see the head and the body and the apparatus of the fish, to the right of the head and the left of the beady black eyes and back of the head. They are kidney shaped, occupying perhaps one-third of the upper part of the body. When at peace with itself and the rest of the world the torpedo fish swims around in the leisure or rests in shallow water, burrowing into the sand at ease, but if attacked the batteries are discharged and the fish is forced to swim. If it can swim away. It gets its power by using its batteries to supply the necessary current to kill, but it must first complete the connection with the object on which it wishes to feed. These torpedo fish in shallow water have caught them in nets, but on handlings them have been very glad to let them go and avoid further shock. Fishermen have been told that the torpedo fish is not dangerous. The species is common along the south Atlantic and Gulf coast.

A noticeable characteristic of the American apple growing industry in all sections of the country is the fact that the majority of the people who are entering the field. There seems to be something of a general mania to take up fruit raising which exceeds in extent the stampede of a few years ago when the prospect of a new apple variety and the possibility of great profits induced a good many of the new comers have had little experience in fruit raising or indeed in farming of any sort and those who are laboring, as many of them are, under the delusion that they can make a fortune without requiring neither experience nor hard work, would seem doomed to a rapid awakening. On the other hand many of the men who have lately taken up apple raising are seasoned farmers and business men, of energy and determination who will win out in the end, even if they do stumble a few times in the first. What is more, a number of them have the capital back of them, and the business industry is liable to prove a waiting game, only with young trees which have not reached the bearing stage; but also to some extent the nature, or character, of the soil, the climate, and the growing conditions may ruin a crop until a few years have passed.

The squad of hungry men eagerly and anxiously waited the arrival of the foreman, who might pick out some of the most robust among them to aid in shifting the mountain of goods from the trucks to the clearing sheds during the night.

For nearly an hour the prince watched the work proceeding in the big yard under the white glare of the arc lamps with immense interest, and chatted to the men about him, entering thoroughly into the spirit of their rough but good humored banter. A few minutes before midnight one of the railway officials who was always in the presence of the prince came to him by his royal highness and stood by him. TORPEDO FISH LIKE A SKATE.
But the Electric Ray Carries Its Own Storage Battery.

A recent addition to the division of fishes in the new national museum in Washington has proven one of the most interesting specimens in the entire collection, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger. It is the electric ray, known in the language of the scientists as the "Margarine brasiliensis," harmless enough as a name, but capable of repelling its enemies in a manner peculiarly its own, which gives it its common title of the "torpedo" fish.

The electric ray is of the skate variety, with

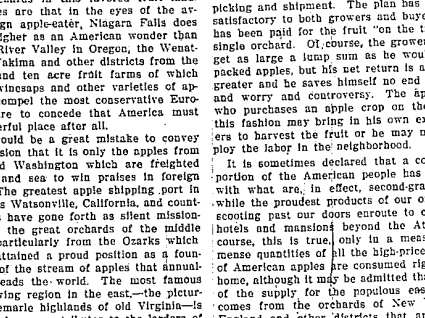

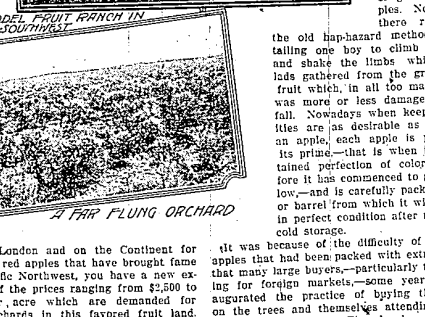

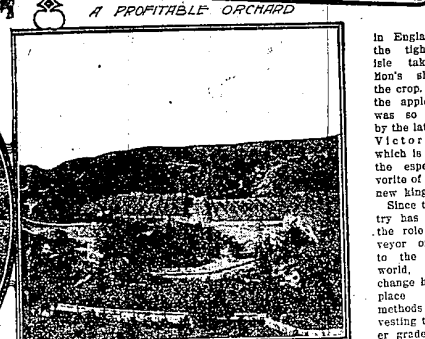

There were points of resemblance between Mrs. Hammond and the lilies of the field; she had married a young man with a good salary, but she herself had never earned a penny of her life, nor had she been blessed with wealth to do parents.

"We have a joint account in the National Fountainbank," she announced to one of her friends, when she had been married a few months. "It is such fun to pay bills by check."

"What do you mean by a joint account?" asked the incredulous friend. "Do you live in equal shares?"

"Oh, I don't put in any," said Mrs. Hammond. "Will puts it in and I draw it out."

year hence. Some of the apple growers have expressed fear within the past year or two that this immense influx of apple producers will serve to depress the price of apples in the market and force down prices. The best-posted authorities, however, take a different view. They point out that not only is apple production in this country a natural increase but also that the growth in the population of the country, but, more significant still, is the circumstance that the American people are able to make more extensive use of this superbly healthful fruit, serving it in a variety of forms which will make the fruit what is or to be, a staple on every American table.
