

Mazda B-Series Truck from previous page

Both are offered in two trim levels, with two cab configurations and your choice of 2- or 4-wheel-drive.

Base price of the B2300 is $12,250. Base price of the B4000 is $16,265. With all the bells and whistles on the B4000 -- and ours was loaded to the max -- the price was $24,376. Didn't want you to get the impression a Mazda truck was out of reach. As always, it's what you put in that makes the price go up.

That said, I was still impressed by the vast amount of standard equipment on the B4000 Cab Plus 4x4: Anti-lock brakes, 60/40 split bench seat, center armrest with storage, console with cupholders, AM/FM stereo, tachometer, cargo box light, maplight, headlight on, warning chime, dual mirrors, tinted glass, intermittent wipers, power brakes, heavy duty shock absorbers, heavy-duty battery, underbody skid plates and power steering.

Mazda also gives you a tank of gas on the house.

The SE-5 package costs about $4,000 and gives you better tires, alloy wheels, a premium stereo system, sliding rear window, pivoting quarter windows, privacy glass, a cargo cover, air conditioning, towing and payload package, bedliner, passenger air bag, ABS, power windows/locks/mirrors, tilt steering, cruise control and keyless entry.

The bedliner is a must for anyone who is planning on throwing anything back there. But if you don't get the bedliner, you should know that there's a double wall bed and plenty of cargo tie-down hooks. The hooks are there with the bedliner, as well.

If you're considering a really cute, runly strong truck that can really take care of your trailering needs, this Mazda B4000 is an excellent option.
