Halloween from page A1

It was "a madhouse" at Big Apple Bagel, said one employee about Saturday's day-long festival. She didn't know how many coupons were handed out, but Downey estimated the number at 1,800.

About 680 coupons were given out at The Gold Loft, like Big Apple Bagel one of the newer downtown stores.

No coupons were being given out at Farmington Center Florist, but activity was bustling anyway, said owner Linda Trzcinaki.

"My gosh, I don't think I've seen so many kids in my life," she said. "It was unbelievable."

A florist employee handed out six large bags of Halloween candy, one piece at a time.

Trzcinaki said events such as

Saturday's will hopefully pay dividends for the business district. "It's exposure, but most people aren't buying anything." That's not how Clothes Encounters owner Salen saw it. "I had a fabulous Saturday. It puts people in a good mood and they buy. It promotes downtown Farmington, gives us more visibility."

there would only be three less houses with 24 lots instead of the negotiated 27 lots, Councilman Jerry Ellis said. A court loss would've meant more houses as well as several thousands dollars of damages.

"Enough is enough," Ellis said.

Power Road residents felt the agreement favored the developer and asked, in vain, if council members could delay approving it.

Many questions are still unanswered, they said. They cited continuing disputes over neighboring property lines, concerns over preservation of trees and certain concessions in the consent judgment, which includes the developer being able to put up an entrance sign.

Sy Kernicky conducted his own filibuster. He spoke for 30 minutes, listing several complaints about the agreement. He noted that he had spoke 45 minutes on the topic at another meeting.

At one point, Mayor Aldo Vagnozzi impatiently asked Kernicky when he would conclude. Kernicky surveyed other residents if they wanted him to finish and he continued.

With a sharp rap of his gavel, Vagnozzi called for a break that cut Kernicky off.

Kernicky disputed the city's role in getting the lawsuit against residents dropped. The city attorney initially said the city couldn't represent the residents because it was a conflict of interest, Kernicky said.

"We would appreciate it if you'd give credit to our attorney, Albert Holz, in getting this lawsuit dropped," Kernicky said.

Kernicky and other residents nonetheless thanked city officials for their help. Kernicky pointed out that his name has been misapplied on all the documents.

"If we are reimbursed, and I hope we are, will I be able to cash that check?" said Kernicky, drawing a few laughs.

Other residents echoed similar disenchantment.

"We should not be intimidated by signing this consent agreement," said Peggy Lackies.

Another resident asked that his name be removed from the agreement altogether, which means he wouldn't be reimbursed for legal costs by the developer. "It should have never been on it," said Ken McDaniel.

Council members said the agreement was the best solution. The city will oversee off-site water and sewer construction.

"We certainly fought for the residents in this development," Councilman Jon Grant said.

The plan calls for at least 33 acres of multiple family housing to go along with 43 acres of commercial development.

A holdup is money that is needed to help buy property for the residential portion of the project, which is three times the going rate, said Mike Kaline, Malan Realty spokesman.

Residents and the city will reap the benefits of the plan, which addresses flooding and spruces up an aging area, the developer said.

"Until we get some type of response, the numbers don't justify us moving forward," Kaline said.

Kaline doesn't appear discouraged by council members' comments about the DDA or TIF idea.

Most people don't understand the concept, he said. TIF allows tax money to be collected from the increased value of property in certain area, usually through a DDA or principal shopping district.

Such a plan could raise $7 million over a 20-year period, developers told to council members.

However, revenue cannot be collected from school taxes under Proposition 130, Oakland County and Oakland Community College can opt out of any TIF plan.

"This one happens to be the perfect example when both the public and private sector can work together to accomplish a somewhat financially burdensome redevelopment project," Kaline said.

"If the city wants to see the redevelopment per the master plan they've developed they're going to have help because there is no way it works."

Residential land is $100,000 an acre, Kaline said. The developer expects to pay at least three times that in order to acquire 35 to 40 acres for residential portion of the project.

The developer has met with the nearby residents "off and on" to talk about buying their land, Kaline said.

"We've tossed out numbers to everybody," he said. "That's not to say everybody is a 100 percent happy with the number we have thrown out."

"Until we can see kind of the light end of the tunnel and everyone is going to cooperate here..."
