Beware of spammers, scammers

I had a friend call me at home the other night, a nice church-going woman who heard my praises about all the Internet has to offer and signed up with an American Online account.

But now she was mad at me.

But now she was mad at me.

"This is terrible," she said. "I read about this happening to other people but I never thought it would be me."

What had happening to other people but I never thought it would be me."

What had happened to my friend is that when she legged onto her AOL account a few days ago she heard the "You've Got Mail!" greeting that signifies e-mail messages waiting to be read. What she found were three offers to visit Internet sex sites. She wanted to know how these sleazy pornographers got her e-mail address and why they sent their smut offers to her. I explained all about the "Spam" problem of unsolicited bulk e-mail, how it is so eloging the Net that Congress is now considering legislation.

My friend wanted to know what she should do to stop it from ever happening again. I told her to forward the offending material to AOL officials.

"Will that help?" she asked.

I had to say, probably not. AOL gets so many complaints like this that it can barely acknowledge them. Besides, even if AOL was successful in identifying the Spammers who offended my friend, all these legzes would have to do is get a new account name and start all over again.

Spammers have Borgamas that collect—who offended my friend, all these sleazes would have to do is get a new account name and start all over opain.

Spanmers have programs that collect e-mail addresses. These highly sophisticated sniffer programs go out on the Net and grab every e-mail address that appears in newsgroups, in forum discussions, from Net chat areas and even from the membership search for a buddy" feature offered by AOL.

That last feature, meant by AOL to foster online community among its more than ine million subscribers, is one reason why America Online subscribers are so vulnerable to those Spanmers.

Last week, my AOL mailbox was filled with more than 35 of unsolicited messages, offering get rich quick schemes, cures for diseases like psoriasis and cancer and at least eight different XXX-rated adult video for live sex sites on the Internet.

My advice for my friend? I told her to quit AOL, and to be sure and tell AOL why she was pulling the plug. If you're going to use the Internet, I recommend signing on with a local Internet Service Provider. That doesn't guarantee that you'll never get Spam, but what you do get will be less than what will come into your mailbox via a commercial service provider like AOL.

I think the Spam problem and, in particular, the proliferation of porno sites on the Net threatens to kill the Internet itself. It is out-of-centrol. And with it has come an ever-growing fraud problem. It's not just the Spammers anymore.

Now it's the Scammers we have to watch out for.

Terry Gardiner is a friend of mine who runs an Internet consumer protection site called Webguardian (www.webguardian.com). Webguardian investigates and exposes web fraud and inappropriate online behavior. Gardiner's group is now hearing a host of horror tales involving people who provided credit card numbers to gain access the norm sites.

provided credit card numbers to gain access the porn sites.

The latest scanis are relating to the adult sites. If anyone in a family gets too excited at a porn site and gives them a credit card number, the charges really start coming,

The credit card bills don't reflect a porn site because there are a couple of sites that bill gainst Visa for as many as 4,000 adult prom sites. Usually the adult is too embarrassed to tell his wife he did a stupid thing, so he keeps paying until he finds out he's been had?

Webguardinn is one place Net users should go before engoging in any sort of electronic transaction via the internet. Hore are some other sites Gardiner's group recommends to check up on companies doing business on the Net or to voice complaints and take action against the Spammers and Scommers.

the Oct. 17 opening reception for the 40th-anniversary retrospective exhibition. The preclamation goes on to say that Whitney's "architectural expertise and judicious advice played a major role in creating a new era for the BBAA.

"May all future BBAA voluncers strive to emulate his service and exemplify his efforts," it concludes.

Whitney came to Michigan in 1979 as project architect for the then-planned new University of Michigan hospital. At the invitation of BBAA member Jerry Shea, a Birmingham architect, Whitney arrived at the BBAA in 1991 to help select an architect.

tural team for the building expansion. Denver architects James Nordile and David Trybn won the contract. Whitney later was asked to join the BDAA's Board of Trustees and to chair the Facilities Committee.

What little I have contributed to the BBAA is just my way of giving back to the community for what has been for me a very special and fulfilling career in the architectural profession. Whitney said. 'I find this award very humbling, for just seeing children, young people and adults enjoying the product of our effort is ample reward.'

The Citrin Volunteer of Excellence Award is named after BBAA super volunteer and former board president Susie Citrin of Birmingham.
