Behind the magic of flying

"Everyone has a dream, whether it's on stage or off stage," said Paul Ruben, who pulls the strings to send Peter Pan airborne. "For me, this is living a dream." He's not alone.

He's not alone.

Each performance, Ruben stands atop a 10foot ladder wearing a tress while a wire is tied around his waist. On the other end of the wire is Cathy Rigby, waiting to make the ultimate stage entrance.

At the right time, Ruben jumps from the ladder, and Rigby ascends about 12 feet. Typically, audiences react with a gasp.

The effect is the theatrical answer to pixie

In the late 1970s, "Peter Pan" was reprised with Sandy Duncan. And in 1991, Rigby brought her unmatched athleticism to the role in a national tour. She's received wide critical acclaim and a Tony nomination as best actress for her role.

While the popular focus is on Peter Pan's instructive whimsy, it's Wendy who provides the grounding for the story's time-less appeal.

"If the audience doesn't believe Wendy believes in Peter Pan, then they won't oither, said Sagardia, who first appeared in Detroit four years ago in Evita."

"I never thought of Detroit as a theater town until we stayed there (for a month), 'she said from Palm Springs where the company was finishing up its west coast run before heading to the Midwest.

"Detroit is incredibly receptive, a city that opens its arms," said Sagardia, who has an unconventional training for the stage.

Parents will recognize some of their favorite songs from Sesame Street, and children will know the words to some of the newer songs. There are also some songs written especially for this show.

Some grandparents might never have been to Sesame Street, but chances are pretty good they've been to the Fox.

"There's a lot of nostalgia," said Gladman, and Bill Lee of Birmingham, senior director of marketing for Olympia Entertainment. Parents and grandparents taking kids to the Fox will say I remember when I took your morn or grandma to a movie here.

For many children, Sesame Street Live is their first exposure to a live performance, and being in the theater.
