Singer takes strong approach to writing love songs

CHRISTINA FUOCO

The last time Boston pop singer Jen Trynin played the Detroit area, she was overcome with a feeling of sadness.

"I was taking a walk that afternoon all over the place. It was kind of warm but not too hot. There was something incredibly striking about the city," Trynin said about the area surrounding St. Andrew's Hall and The Shelter in Detroit.

"It was somewhat desolate, but it had really beautiful architecture. I had a little bit of a sad feeling of a huge past in a city that hasn't really caught up in the present."

Trynin along with her drummer Steve Scully, bassist Josh Lattanzi and guitarist Cory Harding travels north of the city Wednesday, Jan. 28, to perform at the 7th House in Pontiac in support of her sophomore effort "Gun Shy Trigger Happy" (Warner Bros.).

When the words "female singer/songwriter" appear with Trynin's name, it would seem as if she's another member of that genre crying and whining about love gone bad.

Trynin offers an alternative—a strong woman telling frank stories of a one-sided love affair in "I Don't Need You," of a relationship that wouldn't work out in "Bore Me," and of the cosmetic surgery in "Under the Knife."

"Being a chick or being a guy in love is a big, big, big thing. Sometimes I think that girls sequester themselves away to this corner and all they feel comfortable showing is how they feel in relation to men," Trynin explained.

"I love men. I love love. I love all of that stuff. It's fun. It's a huge part of life."

She cited as an example her melancholy first single, "Get-away," which sounds as if it was written about a lover on the tell me that we're leaving you could never go. Don't cry don't put your arms around me. I already know you got nowhere to go." Trynin had another subject in mind.

"I realize that people think it's about a person. I guess I knew that people would because of the way I wrote the song. The song's really about the month of February. It happened to be a long month that particular year. I was spacing out and I was wondering what it would be like if all the months were a person. What would it feel like to be February and be a month that everybody's sick of."

The album closes with "Rang You and Ran" which harkens back to Trynin's childhood. "I was feeling a certain way staring out the window. It was late at night. I don't know why I had this image in my head of being a little kid and ringing someone's doorbell and running away," she said.

"I was thinking about that and thinking about what it would take for an adult to do that. People would think it was very strange. It would take a lot of an adult to walk up to someone's doorbell and run."

For "Gun Shy Trigger Happy,"

Trynin took the recording process in a different direction than her debut "Cockamamie" (Warner Bros.).

"Cockamamie" took a longer period of time. We did it spottily with a bunch of different people. Mike Dennee (the producer) and I were trying to make a record that sounded cohesive. We wanted to give it as much as a trio rock sound as we could get. We wanted to make it relatively consistent even though there were so many people who played on it," she explained via telephone Sunday from the Boston offices of her record company

Squint Records.

"With 'Gun Shy' it was the opposite. We decided we were going to use me, Ed (Valasek) the bass player, Chris (Foley) the drum player, and Mike who played keyboards. Nobody else played on the record. We did it all within that room and with that group of people. We wanted to see how varied we could make it sound."

The result, she added, was a "much more loose and creative" album.

After a self-described "confusing and slow start" to touring, Trynin is looking forward to going back on the road.

"We did a few weeks opening for Paula Cole, which was really kind of cool in a way. I generally play electric guitar but they wanted me to play that part of our acoustically. I wasn't very happy about it at the beginning but it ended up being fun. It became easier for me to do the whole acoustic thing. When I was younger I played like that a lot. But I'm extremely happy playing my music in a more kind of rock way."

Jen Trynin performs Wednesday, Jan. 28, at the 7th House, 7 N. Saginaw, Pontiac. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. for the 18 and older show. Tickets are $8 in advance. For more information, call (248) 335-8100 or visit <http://www.961melt.com>
