Farmington community represented at 'Avenge Cancer'

BY SANDRA ARMSTRONG

Carole Walker continued her mission of turning anger into a message at "A Taste of Goes to the Movies - Avenge Cancer," Aug. 17.

The reception was held at the Galleria Offcentre in Southfield, followed by a special showing of "The Avengers" at the Star Theatre.

Walker, a former West Bloomfield resident who now lives in Commerce Township, explained that part of the anger she felt when she discovered she had cancer was that "I hadn't found it myself."

When the tumor was found in June 1992, it had grown to the size of an orange, Walker said. That was despite yearly mammograms and periodic self-examination.

Former state Rep. Maxine Berman, a Democrat from Southfield, hosted Walker at the state Capitol where she testified about what she had been through. Laws regarding mammography were strengthened after her testimony, Walker said.

"Women need to be their own advocate, and if they have any doubts, get a second opinion," she said.

Now Walker acts as a volunteer for the Barbara Ann Karmanos Cancer Institute, presenting slide shows and video presentations on the importance of breast exams and mammography.

"My main message is that I believe in what the Karmanos Institute does and in the education (about cancer) people should get that it provides," Walker said.

She calls herself "a survivor in many ways," having been bedridden for a year while waiting for a broken leg to heal. Chemotherapy delayed the healing, she says. She also survived a closed head injury, which forced her to learn to talk all over again.

Walker said she benefited from a support group on spiritual healing offered by another cancer survivor, Pat Sachs of Southfield, director of the Oakland regional office of the Karmanos Institute in Lathrup Village.

Sachs limped bravely through the reception where she was warmly received after having undergone her second cancer-related surgery.

Also on hand were Michael Fenberg of Birmingham, who chaired the event, and Myron Frasier, a Southfield city councilman who chairs the Karmanos Oakland board.

Fenberg described the Karmanos Institute as a "good organization to get involved with."

Joining in the reception were Deanna Weisman of Farmington Hills and her sister, Shelly Rubenstein, who worked on the committee for the event.

"It's been a labor of love," Weisman said. "We work with a lot of fun people and we hope we can make a difference."

Sandy Smith, volunteer chair from the Novi Karmanos center, said what started out as volunteer work on Wednesdays has become a board position for her and amounts to "very rewarding work."

Acting as master of ceremonies was WXYZ-TV Channel 7 newscaster Robbie Timmons, who told the theater audience that both of her parents died from cancer and that she has friends who are cancer survivors.

Timmons noted that all those present had been touched by the disease and were there to support efforts of the institute. She encouraged the public to invite Karmanos staff into the workplace and community "so that message of education gets out to the public. Education is what we have to work on.... Thanks for joining me in a worthwhile cause."
