No royal flush, but 'Rounders' deals a solid hand

By JON KATZ
SPECIAL WRITER

Back before they banned broadcast advertising of cigarettes, there was a jingle that went, "You've got a lot to like with a Marlboro: filter... flavor... flip-top box." You've got a lot to like with "Rounders," starring Matt ("Good Will Hunting") Damon. But a few points to deduct, as well.

The underground high-stakes poker circuit of New York is the canvas for director John Dahl ("The Last Seduction") and screenwriters Brian Koppelman and David Levien (a U of M grad). These are mean streets, indeed, populated by seedy denizens with Runyonesque names like Worm, Teddy KGB and Joey Kuit.

Our boy Matt—the other fair-haired heartthrob of the moment—is Mike McDermott, a reluctant law student by day and a reformed "rounder" by night. He's a brilliant card-counting shark who could take people like a poker hand ("If you can't spot the sucker in the first half hour at the table, you are the sucker"). Having lost a five-figure stake to Teddy KGB (John Malkovich) on an hilarious Russian who twists open his Oreo cookies accompanied by "Star Wars"-type orchestration, Mike forakes the back rooms for the courtrooms, urged on by his perky classmate/roommate Jo (Gretchen Mol) and poker mentor Knish (John Turturro).

Into his life returns Worm (Edward Norton), a high school chum who's been boardin' with the warden. Imagine Eddie Haskell gone real bad. Worm is a mechanic, a cheat ("I see a mark, I take him down"). He's also in the hole for $25,000 to Teddy and his greasy associate Gram (Michael Rispoli), who wouldn't want to meet in a bright alley. Mike agrees to help Worm, but together they dig an even deeper hole, the only way out being a showdown with Teddy in a winner take all match of Texas Hold'em.

Any similarity between

"Rounders" and "The Hustler," not to mention "High Noon," is purely, we're safe to say, intentional.

Yet, "Rounders" is true to its turf. Director Dahl, like Scorsese before him, takes us on a tour of New York that you won't find in Circle Line brochure. Eyes peer out with evil suspicion from behind sliding peepholes of brownstones left over from speakeasy days. Damon's narration is sprinkled with the wisdom of his world ("It's a sin to let a sucker keep his money" and "You've gotta think of it as a war"). And there's one great line that only a Mets fan will love to its fullest. Describing his descent to the dusky bricks and musty smells of the poker den, Damon says, "I feel like (Bill) Buckner walking back into Shea."

Which brings us to the film's two bum cards in an otherwise winning hand. Damon is easy to look at and easy to like, no argument there. But he comes off more like the Red Sox first baseman referred to above than as a toptight, hardened pokermeister—a "rounder" known in every underground club in the five boroughs. The Massachusetts-born

Damon, so perfect as Boston Southie Will Hunting, shares the screen with native New Yorkers Norton, Rispoli, Turturro and Martin Landau (as his law professor). Against them, images of John Voight getting off the bus in "Midnight Cowboy," with "Everybody's Talking At Me" on the soundtrack, are unavoidable.

In contrast, Edward Norton's "Worm" is just that—the worm in the Big Apple. He's a joyous lout you want to just go away—or help strangle. His is a wondrous performance that leaves you panting for the next one.

The other criticism is more a warning brush up on your poker. Try as the narration does to deal us in, the complexities and strategies of the game often leave us clueless, missing the meaning and folding the hand.
