Shoo: Some think there are too many geese in Heritage Park, especially near the pond. Visitors are asked not to feed them.

Geese

council members about the problem during a study session Monday.

Other possible remedies include swapping eggs and using border collies.

To curb geese reproduction, naturalists put plastic eggs in a nest. With an unhatched egg, a female goose won't breed, naturalists say.

Golf courses, another favorite geese hangout, sometimes use dogs to whisk away the birds.

Any goose removal methods must be well thought out, a Hills councilman said.

"If you move the geese, where are you going to move them to? Across the street on people's lawns where they were before," Councilman Jerry Ellis said.

Ellis added, "Geese are part of a natural park."

Plans don't include entirely evicting the bird associated with children's fairy tales from the city park, Boyer said. At least 10 of Heritage's 200-plus acres could be set aside for geese.

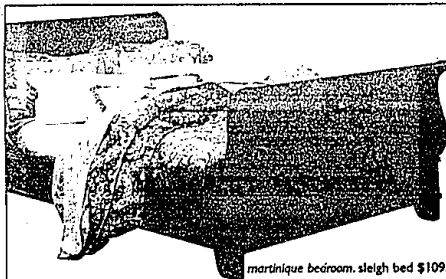

Special services staff are expected to meet with other parks and rec departments and conservationists to develop a plan.

Food service company celebrates

HDS Services, one of the nation's largest food service and hospitality management companies, recently celebrated 15 years of food service management at McAuley Center in Farmington Hills.

This project at McAuley Center, a retirement center for nuns, also known as the Sisters of Mercy, the dining facilities have been expanded to allow HDS Services to offer its "Meals, Motifs and More" program.

This program keeps food service exciting with meal functions related to community events. HDS Services plans meals and other events around holidays observed by the Sisters of Mercy who live at the facility.
