foundation chairman. "As we enter our fifth year, the foundation is reinforcing its commitment to support programming that provides meaningful and enriching opportunities for area children and families."

Lichtman has experience in project management, strategic planning, media relations and event planning. Lichtman & Associates work with a number of small- and mid-sized companies, non-profit organizations and professional athletes.

The contracting of an executive director also marks an evolution in the foundation five years after its birth. Lichtman said the foundation will be her primary client.

"This is a way of throwing a new energy behind the foundation," Lichtman added. "We are taking the foundation to a new level."

The public may most readily associate the foundation with its support of the Commission for Children, Youth and Families and the popular after-school programs. But part of Lichtman's new job will be to promote the foundation's other efforts, as well.

"If someone gives to the foundation, they are supporting all types of initiatives," Lichtman said. Among them are contributions to the Farmington YMCA, Farmington Families in Action and the Multicultural/Multiracial Council.

To raise money for Farmington Families in Action, Lichtman, Tartt and Dennis Fitzgerald, foundation vice chairman, will participate in the Celebrity Server Night at Big Boy on Farmington, north of Eight Mile, in Farmington.

The foundation is hosting its fifth annual Cornucopia Ball Friday, Nov. 12 at Glen Oaks Country Club on 13 Mile to benefit the organization by allowing it to provide money to family programs in the community.

The event is open to the public and tickets may be purchased for $125 per person. The foundation also is seeking sponsors for the event through cash contributions or donation of items for a silent auction that highlights the evening.

"The Cornucopia Ball is a great way for residents, business owners and civic leaders to come together and support programming that invests in the youth and families of our community," Webb said. "Those who participate will make a profound impact on the lives and futures of area families."

For more information on the Cornucopia Ball or to order tickets, call Lichtman, (248) 855-6542.

Law designed to get bad drivers off road

Drunken and reckless drivers have more to fear from police and the courts under a package of laws that took effect Oct. 1.

"We're putting the brakes on drunken driving while sending a strong message that repeated drunk and reckless driving will be treated as the heinous crimes they are," said state Sen. Loren Bennett, R-Canton, in a press release.

The "Repeat Offender" package targets drivers with two or more alcohol-related driving convictions within seven years or three in 10 years as well as those who repeatedly drive while their licenses are suspended or revoked.

The legislation allows police officers to immediately confiscate the metal license plates on vehicles driven by repeat offenders, regardless of who owns the vehicle, and issue a temporary paper license valid until the case is decided.

In some cases, when an individual receives multiple convictions for driving under the influence, the vehicle may be sold to offset law enforcement costs.

The package also requires immobilization for up to three years of vehicles owned by drivers convicted of a third drunken driving offense and mandatory substance abuse treatment.

Drivers with suspended licenses will be prosecuted for a five-year felony for involvement in an injury-causing accident and a 15-year felony for involvement in an accident causing death.

Anyone who knowingly allows a driver with a suspended license to use their vehicle will be charged with a two-year felony for injury-causing accidents and a five-year felony for accidents causing death.
