Ceremonies: Church and civic leaders, including Bloomfield Hills Mayor Benjamin Hoff (second from right) initiate the groundbreaking for the new Mormon Temple following the groundbreaking ceremony on Oct. 10.

Ground broken for state's 1st Latter-day Saint temple

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints recently broke ground for a new temple, to be located in Bloomfield Hills next to the current meetinghouse, 425 North Woodward, north of 16 Mile Road. When the temple opens, it will be the first in Michigan.

Thomas Bithell, president of the Bloomfield Hills stake, which is a regional unit comprised of several congregations, said that in addition to Bloomfield Hills, stakes in Ann Arbor, Westland and Grand Blanc will use the temple. It will also serve the Michigan Detroit Mission.

Latter-day Saint temples are considered the most sacred buildings in the Church, Bithell said. They are distinct from the local meetinghouses where Sunday worship services are conducted.

"Temples are very special," said Bithell, noting there are only some 50 in the world. "The closest are in Toronto and Chicago. This is something that the members of the church here in Michigan have wanted for many years."

The temple is among more than 30 that the church's top governing body recently announced will be immediately built, to accommodate the needs of the growing church membership in areas far from existing temples. That will bring the total number of temples to 100 by the turn of the century.

In temples, members participate in religious ceremonies that reach beyond mortality, such as baptisms on behalf of deceased ancestors and eternal marriage.

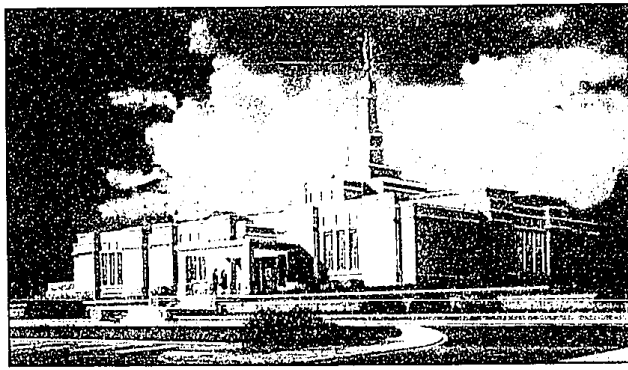

Performing such temple ordinances receives strong emphasis in the Church. Members are taught that they have a religious obligation to trace their own genealogies and perform temple ordinances for their ancestors.

The Bloomfield Hills stake has an extensive genealogy library that is open to the public.

Bithell said it's expected that the temple, which will have some 10,000 square feet of floor space, will be complete in a year.

A public open house will be scheduled before the temple is dedicated for its intended use.

After that, only worthy mem-
