Dentistry
in the 90s

by Herbert M. Gardner, D.D.S.

A DRY RUN

Toothpaste has its place on the toothbrush, but it is the mechanical action of the brush that plays the biggest role in cleaning teeth. This fact was demonstrated recently in a study that had 130 people dry-brush their teeth until they felt clean. The study recorded a 50% decrease in gum bleeding and a 60% decrease in tartar buildup. The suggestion is that toothpaste merely cleans the tongue with too much flavor that cannot feel the plaque on teeth and many bubbles that people cannot see where they are brushing. Thus we may want to start brushing with a clean, dry brush until teeth feel clean, followed by the introduction of toothpaste.
