

'Snow Falling on Cedars' a disappointment

BY BOB THOMAS
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

The 1995 novel by David Guterson, "Snow Falling on Cedars," proved an immediate hit with readers and critics. It was an engaging story of young lovers — one white, the other Japanese-American — on a fishing and farming island in Puget Sound.

The love story was played against the backdrop of World War II, when the islanders of Japanese descent were sent to detention camps. Tensions between the two ethnic groups remained after the war, especially after a white fisherman was found dead at sea. A young Japanese farmer was accused of murder.

The film version of "Snow Falling on Cedars" held great promise. Australian Scott Hicks, who directed Geoffrey Rush to an Academy Award in "Shine," was chosen to direct his first American film. He shares the writing credit with Ron Bass, an Oscar winner for "Rainman." A distinguished cast was assembled, and stunning locations were found in the state of Washington and British Columbia. The end result, however, is a disappointment.

The filmmakers apparently mistrusted the straightforward nature of Guterson's novel. The narrative flow has been chopped up, the time element leaping from one decade to another then back again, flashbacks appearing within flashbacks.

The photography lapses into moody sepias as though the Northwest was totally lacking in color. The portentous musical score resonates with pounding drums, swirling strings, smashing crescendos and a chorus reminiscent of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

Hicks' direction calls for mood-setting close-ups of raindrops falling from leaves, the inner workings of a newspaper type machine, dead fish, etc.

The film begins in total darkness. Amid the creaking sounds of a boat at sea, a faintly visible scene emerges. It is a fishing boat in a dense fog. Something violent has happened.

Thereafter the plot is told in shifting time frames. The most moving aspect of the story concerns the relationship of the two young lovers: Hatsue, daughter of a Japanese strawberry farmer, and Ishmael, the son of a local white newspaper editor. They must play and love in secret because of the pressures of society.

The most tragic sequence comes when the Japanese are sent to the Manzanar internment center in California after the bombing of Pearl Harbor. The underlying tensions between the two elements of the island population become intensified.

Hatsue's romance with Ishmael is discovered, and she must vow never to see or write him again. She marries another childhood friend, also an internnee.

The murder trial, replete with flashbacks, provides the climax of "Snow Falling on Cedars." Ishmael (Ethan Hawke), badly wounded in the war and editor of the newspaper since his father's death, is still haunted by his love for Hatsue (Youki Kudoh). He struggles over whether he should help save the accused man, who is Hatsue's husband.

The casting is faultless. Among the standouts: Max Von Sydow, the gentle defense attorney; James Cromwell, the resolutely fair judge; Rick Yune, the murder suspect; Ethan Hawke and Youki Kudoh, the thwarted lovers; Sam Shepard, the fair-minded newspaper editor.

"Snow Falling on Cedars" is a Universal Pictures release produced by Harry J. Ufland, Ron Bass, Kathleen Kennedy and Frank Marshall. Running time: 128 minutes.

DAVID JAMES/UNIVERSAL STUDIOS

Haunting: Ishmael Chambers (Ethan Hawke) and Hatsue Miyamoto (Youki Kudoh) embrace, years after their childhood love has been undone by societal pressures and familial customs in "Snow Falling on Cedars."
