to soe you – live – and if you make a mistake, everybody will see it.

Those closest to the teen don't think she has much to worry about. Thorough study habits, time management skills and interest in science should help her overcome any "mistakes," and she also is a curified diver.

Pitts became interested in the JASON Project while in sixth grade at Hartland Middle School at Orc Creek. The just always been curious of things, explained Pitts, a Hartland resident whose mom, Kathy, drives her to and from Mercy almost every day of the school week. The youngeter transferred from the Hartland district before this year in order to participate on a competitive girls swim team.

And that curiosity stands to soon pay off for Pitts.

"I think it's really cool," said Pitts, "because I'll get to go see Aquarius, and not too many divers get to see it now because it's in a close-doff area.

Quest to learn

Both Kathy Pitts and Kelley's biology teacher at Mercy, John Eshelman, recently talked about the youngster's determination and a quest for knowledge that belies her age.
"When the VCR broke, she said, Dad (Ed Pitts), don't throw it away," Kathy Pitts said. "And she attacked it with a scrow driver and took it all apart."

According to Eshelman, it's not easy to compare Pitts to other kids her age.

"When I need to find a student, the first place I go is the cafeteria, but I've never found Kelley there," he said, with a chuckle. "I'd find her in the computer lab or the library."

In the lab, she'd probably be checking out an Internet site for the JASON Project or something.

checking out an internet site for the JASON Project or something.

Actually, Pitts did use the Worla Wide Web to research where she wants to attend college. Her choice was Texas A&M in Galveston, Texas, where she intends to study marine biology.

"Kelley found them on the Internet one day and she said, Mom, I want to do Texas A&M," Kathy explained. "That's the kind of child she is."

Computer technology (provided by EDS) also is a big part of the JASON Project. Students in computer labs around the United States can internet with the teams in a variety of ways. They States can interact with the teams in a variety of ways. They can: participate in chat rooms; watch a live broadcast via computerized streaming video; explore an underwater science station using Quick-Time Virtual Reality; and post research findings in virtual labs all through the Internet.

Natural connection

Eshelman said Pitts being hooked onto science and the JASON Project is a natural for her.

"She just seems to cat it up;
anything in science is right up her alley," he said. "As I told someone the other day, ... anything that keeps kids involved and interested in science, I'm all for."

Actually, Pitts completed the formal application process to participate in the 1999 Jason Project, when O.E. Dunckel Middle School student John Szymu-

Project, when O.E. Dunckel Mids School student John Szymusiak traveled to the Peruvian rain forest. She was not chosen, but she did not hesitate to try again for JASON XI.

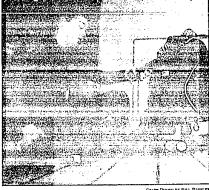

Susan Fishburn, public relations representative for EDS in Troy, will accompany Pitts to Florida next week. Fishburn commented about the student's determination:

"Something I thought was really special about Kelley was that this was her second year for applying." Fishburn acid. "She did not make it (in 1999), and this year she applied and I thought, Wow, what tenacity, to want it that badly."

Concurring about Pitts's character and work ethic was Eshelman.

acter and work ethic was Esser-man.

"She's a good performer," he soid "She sticks to it. She has the organizational skills. She knows how to follow through and go through a series of steps ... much botter than the average ninth grader. Most kids want to get to the finish line. Kelley likes to know how she got there." Both Kathy and Kelley know a good learning opportunity when they see it, and that's how they ject, with Pitts being one of just seven student divers.

Meanwhile, the students will work with modern-day explorer Ballard, who discovered the RMS Titanic on the floor of the Atlantic Ocean. Ballard founded the JASON Project in 1989.
"The things sho's going to do, the people she's going to meet down in Florida will only enhance her chances" of success later in life, said Kathy Pitts adding that she is Kelley's main cheerleader.

Supportive sponsor

Also cheering Pitts on is her sponsor, EDS, which touts "edu-cation through technology" as its

"EDS has been involved with this since Day One of the JASON Project," Fishburn said. "We're considered the founding sponsor and the Internet solu-tion provider for the JASON Foundation and the JASON Pro-

More than 200 southeastern Michigan EDS employees will volunteer during the two weeks of broadcast time at Lamphere High, Fishburn said.

"They're a really good spon-sor," Pitts said of EDS. "They've really helped me a lot with media training and getting ready to go.

But Kathy doesn't think her daughter needed much direction in the first place. "Kelley's a people person.

Background: According to materials publicizing this year's program, the JASON Project (founded in 1989 by modern-day explorer Dr. Robert Ballard) strives to every year lead student explorers "on expeditions to areas inaccessible to most people - from volcanoes and rainforests to shipwrecks rainforeats to shipwrecks and spaceships.

"Named for the mythical Greek here who was on a quest for the Golden Fleeco, JASON is brigging the thrill of adventure to millions of students and teachers around the globe through science, education and technology."
