ferent. It's his birthday, and that brings a smile to Ereth's bewhiskered face. Surely, he'll be the center of attention when his best friend Poppy, a deer mouse, arrives laden with gifts. But Poppy and her husband have business elsewhere, and all the children can do is poke fun at Uncle Ereth's funny way of talking.

have business elsewhere, and all the childron can do is poke fun at Uncle Ereth's funny way of talking.

Listen here, you smidgen of slipper slopper, "cries Ereth in one of his customary alliterative outbursts, threatening to turn them into "pink pickled pasta" if they don't behave.

Disappoint of the track of the track in a blunk of the track in a hunt's teath day track. He knows just what that is and where to find it — salt, stored in a hunt's teath day each in 10 lm wood Forest.

They've set if it raps to capture the animals for their fur. And Leaper the Fox is their first victim. Responding to faint cries for help. Eveth finds her bleeding and mangled. As she draws her last breaks Leaper beigs the old porcupine to care for her three helpless tits. Tumble, Nimble, and Fijp.

"Chipped choese on monkey mold," Ereth exclaims, as he imagines himself nursemaid to three baby foxes. But he grants the dying mother her final wish and lumbers off, immersed in self-pity and a thick blanket of same that he accumulated since.

What follows is a heartfelt the, laced with humor and auxponse, of the porcupine's new relationship with the foxes. There's the tricky matter of a vegetarian providing foad for three frisky meat-enters, not to mention the problem of a cruty old bachelor raising a family.

Want the kids to read this summer? Then take them to meet two award-winning authors who will visit the Detroit area this week.

Miracle's Boys (Putnam's, 15.99), by Jacqueline Woodson, is also about love and a loss that threatens to extinguish it forever. Here, too, a loving mother has died. For the eldeat son, Tyree, that means postponing college and taking a full-time job to support his younger brothers. For Charlie, who was in a juvenile detention home when his mother passed away, it means coming to terms with his mom's absence and his fallure to be available when she needed him most. And for Lafayette, the youngest, the loss of his one remaining parent means a constant achies longing harding handlings along most. And nor Lamyette, myoungest, the loss of his one remaining parent means a constant aching loneliness, along with a nagging guilt, because he was there but couldn't save her. Woodson dieplays an uncanny ability to create inner monlogue and dialogue that ring true for young males, especially for those living in an African-American and Latino community. It was not easy, she admits, to imagine how boys walk, talk and think. But she succeeds admirably, creating characters that are sensitive yet tough, experienced but not jaded.

Like other books by the author, Miracle's Boys explores complex emotional issues that arise from the harsh realities of life: death, allenation and crime. The plot provides no fairy-tale life: death, alienation and crime. The plot provides no fairy-tale endings but shows how human decency and mutual support can produce a climate of hope and affirmation.

Both books can be found at Book Beat, 28010 Greenfield, in Oak Park.
