All farm animals have an instinctive craving for sait. But if it is so placed as to be always within their reach, they will consume just as much as they need, and no more. It is only when it has been kept from them for a long period that there is danger of their eating too much. It is therefore an excellent practice to keep it in a box or boxes where they can have access to it whenever they desire. When they are saited, as is the practice with many farmers, only once a week, while some any get enough, tice with many farmers, only once a week, while some may get enough, others may suffer from a dedicant supply. Salt promotes an active account of the blood, which mere becomes thick and sluggish so long as the supply lepitifiti; it saids a disease the supply spentifity it so chap that no stock-raiser can really afford to deep to his naimfals all they want of it.

Value of Stover.
When it is known that three tons of corn stover is practically equal to one ton of mixed clover and timothy hay, any farmer can easily figure out whether it will pay him to save his clover or not.

Coarse Feed for Colts.

Stuffing the colt with hay or straw, or any very coarse weed, will spoil its looks. Keep this ration down by the use of some grains and less coarse feed.
