himself as a believer in "edutainment," educating by entertainment.

For Malfitano, there's no better place to "edutain" than a festival, where multiple stages continuously showcasing jazz artists serve as classrooms for the uninitiated and the connoisseur alike.

"A festival is a great way to reach and teach people about this art form, without their knowing they've been educated," Malfitano said. "You don't have to proselytize when a song can tell you the whole story."

Malfitano said he hopes Detroiters take advantage of the opportunity to listen to their own story as it translated in the language of jazz.

He expects the notes to ring long and loud enough for everyone to notice.

"I don't think the rest of this country has any idea of who's come out of this town. They're aware of the auto industry and they're aware of Motown," Malfitano said. "I kind of see it as my job to tell them Detroit jazz history through this festival. It's a great vehicle for telling that story because we can tell them where the music's coming from, where it is, and where it's going."

That tale will be told not only through the festival's seasoned veteran jazz artists but also through the dozens of middle school, high school and college bands that will be performing. In past years, scholastic, local and national acts were relegated to separate stages, Malfitano said this year's festival will be different.

"We're kind of abandoned the main stage format," Malfitano said. "Now, we'll have three main stages and one stage dedicated to jazz education and mentoring."

The stages will also be situated in a way that will allow for a view of the river and the city skyline. Performers will be shown on 20-foot-wide video screens. The same screens that were used for the Detroit 300 celebration in July. By bringing the city more into play, Malfitano hopes that festival goers will get a better picture of what jazz is all about.

"It's an urban art form that gets its energy from the street," Malfitano said.

He's also hoping that the sheer variety of performers included in this year's jazz fest roster will bring out the crowds.

"We've got a little bit of everything, and that was by design, not by accident," Malfitano said. "My goal is to make this year as exciting as it possibly can be and to program it so that everyone can enjoy it. It's for anyone who likes music and anyone who likes to be entertained."

ted for free. "It is possible for a family of four to come here for $22," said Hertel. "We allow you to bring picnic lunches. It's a pretty good value."

Looking ahead

In the coming years, the fairgrounds will take on a new face. A multi-purpose lifestyle barn and equestrian center will be built, leaving the coliseum open for other activities like ice shows or sports tournaments. Even the midway is more spacious. Ideas for a racetrack have been shot down, but all hope is not lost for a bigger, better fairgrounds.

No rain?

Organizers are just hoping the weather cooperates and residents have for more than a century

Rock: Eve 6 performs at the 2001 Michigan State Fair.

CD REVIEW

Danse Macabre

The Faint
 Saddle Creek

I didn't realize how much I missed the synthesized sounds of 80s new wave until I popped the latest release by Nebraska (yes, Nebraska)-based sensation The Faint. Danse Macabre - in store August 20 - makes you ache for Duran Duran's heyday - without all that flashy hair and make up.

Made up of four friends who grew up skateboarding around Omaha, The Faint takes its brand of new wave and punk straight to the dance floor, touching on dark topics as murder and betrayal.

At once futuristic and a celebration of the "Me" decade, The Faint combines synthesized noise, fuzzy guitars, sparse drum

Synthetic never sounded quite so good.

A Detroit stop comes in 8 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 14 to the Magic Stick. Tickets $8 advance and $10 at the door.
