'An American Rhapsody' paints portrait of belonging

BY MALCOLM RITTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

An American Rhapsody is a riveting and powerful drama about a 15-year-old girl torn by a simple question: Where is her home?

Is it with her mother, a strong-willed Hungarian immigrant who keeps a tight rein on young Suzanne's life in 1950s California? Or is it with the kindly, loving peasant woman who reared young Suzanne from infancy to age 6 behind the Iron Curtain, in the Hungarian countryside?

Both women love Suzanne deeply, and both felt betrayed when Suzanne was snatched from them. It's not until she returns to Hungary on her own that she finally realizes where—and with whom she belongs. And this movie keeps you with her all the way.

The tale has nothing to do with last year's best seller, American Rhapsody, by Joe Eszterhas. Rather, it's based on the life of Eva Gardos, who makes her debut as screenwriter-director.

Gardos focuses not on historical accuracy but the characters' emotional turmoil. The result is fascinating.

Because of a mix-up, the infant Suzanne is left behind

■ 'The movie features terrific acting all around, especially by Johansson, who makes Suzanne a compelling heroine, and Kinski, who provides a fine edge of desperation as Suzanne's biological mother.'

when her parents and older sister slip out of Hungary to the West during the Cold War. Her mother Margaret (played by Nastassja Kinski) is devastated, but her father Peter (Tony Goldwyn) persuades her to move on to America. Settling into the land of Elvis, Margaret writes letter after letter to get her little girl back.

Suzanne is placed with a peasant family in Hungary by Margaret's mother. When Suzanne is 6, Grandma appears at the farm, supposedly to take her on a trip to Budapest. But the real plan is quite different—a trip to California and Margaret.

Suzanne explores such Western wonders as hamburgers, bubble gum, television and blue jeans, and later grows into a teen-ager (played by Scarlett Johansson, who appeared in The Horse Whisperer and Home Alone 3). But the memories of her beloved Hungarian childhood—a life snatched away by her biological mother and grandmother—tug at her as she chafes under Margaret's strict parenting.

Their conflict comes to a head when Margaret quite literally imprisons Suzanne in her bedroom.

room, and Suzanne shoots her way out.

It's time, Suzanne says, for her to go back to Hungary and sort out where she belongs.

The movie features terrific acting all around, especially by Johansson, who makes Suzanne a compelling heroine, and Kinski, who provides a fine edge of desperation as Suzanne's biological mother.

Hungarian actors Balazs Galko and Zsuzsa Czinkóczi bring warmth to their roles as Suzanne's foster parents in Hungary, with faces that seem to belong in faded portraits from the old country.
