CAPITOL NEWS

State Rep. Andrew Raekowski (R-Farmington Hills) recently unveiled comprehensive legislation creating the first-ever separate set of standards for judges to follow during divorce cases involving special needs children.

- Appointing an unbiased mediator to follow the case from filing to settlement.
- Establishing immediate dower rights for the spouse until financial support for the child.
- Empowering the Friend of the Court to determine special circumstances and recommend them to the presiding judge.
- Requiring judges to give deference to the custodial parent to receive alimony/child support to keep the living environment as stable as possible.

 ■ Creating a standardized system for judges to use in the cases when deriving child support and alimony.
 Raekowski first became aware of the issue after being contacted by Marie Himmler, a consultant who has a special needs child. The legislative package also establishes a state executive partnership to encourage local, employer and foundation support for child care for working families.
