office building surrounded by about 250 parking spaces.

One resident on Waldron said he has made extensive improvements to the house he is renting and hopes to buy.

"It would be devastating to develop on residential property," he said.

Another nearby resident said allowing the building to be three stories high would be intrusive.

A revised agreement for the project calls for the top story windows to be screened from people seeing in or out.

The developer, Steven Schafer, said the building will be a benefit to the community and a service to residences.

Councilwoman Vicki Barnett said the three-story height was a concern for her as well.

"Is there some way we could scale down the building?" she asked.

Schafer said the building height is allowed under the business zoning, but added lights on the second and third floors could be turned off at night.

Brad Fillion, whose home would be directly behind the development, said he had concerns about looking at brick wall outside his back window.

"I don't see why you can't move it forward," he said. "I don't want a brick wall as a fence."

Council discussed removing some parking spaces at the back end of the property to allow more space for plantings that would hide the wall.

Council approved the plan at its Dec. 17 meeting.

The next step, according to Dale Courtanger, director of planning, is for the developer to draft a PUD agreement that includes issues discussed at the meeting.

That contract could come before the council in late January, he said.

Once approved, a site plan review for the project would go before the planning commission. If it passes muster there, the project would be handled by city administration.

Depressed? Try on-line support

Pioneer Counseling Centers, based in Farmington Hills, will offer on-line support to help people cope with a wide array of holiday-related issues.

Working with parent company Pioneer Behavioral Health and other Pioneer subsidiaries, the center will host a live on-line support group on Christmas Day.

"The holiday season for many people can be highly stressful and filled with conflict and loneliness," said CEO Beth Weeks. "The demand for counseling and therapy rises sharply during the holidays, as family, financial and personal stresses are often brought on of magnified by the holiday season."

She feels this year will be particularly difficult, in light of the September 11 tragedies.

The Christmas Day support group is scheduled from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m., at www.pioneer-counseling.com.

Participants are encouraged to arrive early; links to the event will open 30 minutes before the start.

Additional live chats scheduled December 27 and 29 at 8 p.m. will focus on substance abuse and setting reasonable goals.

Participants in the live events will be able to submit questions and interact with other participants, as well as with experienced behavioral health care professionals who will facilitate the groups.

Participation is free. For more information, call 1-800-833-4105.

■ On at least 10 occasions, Quinn took her to his dental office late at night where he would inject her and she would subsequently wake up naked.

■ Farmington Hills police found marijuana, rolling papers, two syringes, various pills, condoms, pornographic DVDs and sex toys at Quinn's apartment. Quinn, 44, was arraigned on a stalking charge Wednesday in 48th District Court in Bloomfield Township.

So far, Quinn is charged with a single felony count of interfering with a witness in criminal investigation and a single charge of stalking, a misdemeanor. The judge ordered Quinn jailed until he can post a cash or surety bond of $500,000. A not guilty plea was entered on his behalf.

Oakland County Assistant Prosecutor Sara Pope-Starnas told the court last week that Quinn is being investigated for criminal sexual conduct and drug violations by Farmington Hills police. She said Quinn was told by police not to have any contact with the woman who made allegations against him. Pope-Starnas said Quinn ignored that warning and contacted the woman twice by phone and sent an e-mail to her.

Quinn was served the summary suspension of his dental license by the state Department of Consumer and Industry Services Thursday and it will be up to him to respond to the accusations and ask for a hearing to fight the suspension, said Maura Campbell, spokeswoman for the department.

She said Farmington Hills police notified the state office of Quinn's recent actions.

Quinn's attorney, Stuart Young, said he is not representing Quinn in regard to his license suspension.

Regarding his stalking charge, Quinn has a preliminary hearing set for 8:45 a.m. Thursday before Judge Edward Avadenka in 48th District Court.

If convicted of the charges, Quinn faces up to 10 years in prison and/or a $20,000 fine on the felony charge. The misdemeanor charge carries up to one year in prison and/or $1,000 in fines and five years' probation.
