

Detroit music dominates Toronto's film festival

BY MARTIN BAKUTYKE AND KIM SILARSKI
CORRESPONDENTS

Quick - name the Detroit musicians whose back catalog contains more number one records than The Beatles, The Rolling Stones, the Beach Boys and Elvis Presley combined. Yep, combined.

The Funk Brothers, the session musicians who provided the instrumental backdrop on dozens of Motown hits during the 1960s, claim that title in the new film Standing in the Shadows of Motown, just one of several movies with Detroit and Michigan ties being featured at this year's Toronto International Film Festival, which continues through Saturday, Sept. 14.

Shadows will have its Detroit debut in November, but will likely reach Motown fans around the world as a result of its Toronto presentation.

Several of the Funk Brothers, including the incredible bassist James Jamerson, have passed away, but filmmaker Paul Justman was lucky enough to interview drummer Richard "Pistol" Allen shortly before his death, this year for this long overdue documentary.

Detroit music history is also spotlighted in MC$A True Testimonial, the story of the seminal 1960s rock group known for its hard-edged sound as well as its banned records, arrest records and its ability to attract the interest of the FBI.

Filmmaker David A. Thomas was too late to interview lead vocalist Rich "Yer and guitarist Fred Smith (husband of rocker Patti Smith), both deceased, but former manager John Sinclair, surviving band members and others including the Sex Pistols' John (Johnny Rotten) Lydon offer their recollections in this highly anticipated work.

8 Mile, the big screen acting debut of Detroit's infamous and incredibly successful rapper Eminem, gets a screening at Toronto this year as a work in progress. Though shot largely in the Detroit area, the film is a true Hollywood pedigree. Curtis Hanson (L.A. Confidential) directs, Oscar winner Brian Grazer (A Beautiful Mind) produces and actress Kim Basinger is featured as Eminem's delirious mother.

Expect to see familiar settings — a Warren trailer park located on the title roadway, the long-shuttered Chin Tiki Polynesian restaurant on Cass downtown and a residential neighborhood in Highland Park, complete with burning houses — when this loosely autobiographical film is released nationwide by year's end.

Plint's Michael Moore returns to Toronto, where he earned his initial acclaim with the anti-General Motors film Rogue and Me, to present Bowling for Columbine, a documentary on America's fascination with guns and violence. Featuring shock rocker Marilyn Manson as the voice of reason, this film is likely to spur strong reactions, if not a new level of insight, among American audiences. Influences at this year's Cannes Film Festival gave it a standing ovation.

Ann Arbor-based experimental filmmaker Travis Wilkerson hopes to follow in Moore's footsteps by generating some buzz at Toronto this year with his two short films — An Injury To One and National Archive V.I. Injury is a documentary about the lynching of early 20th century union organizer Frank Little, while Archive, based on film materials in the public domain, attempts to find connections between pure form and pure politics.

The Toronto festival, now in its 27th year, is the leading film market in North America and a magnet to Cannes in the competition for most important film festival or the planet. More than 300 films are screened for industry types, international media and the movie-loving public on screens throughout the city.

This year's fest will also introduce Frida, the story of Mexican painter Frida Kahlo (wife of Detroit Institute of Arts muralist Diego Rivera) starring Salma Hayek in a role once coveted by yet another Detroit-Madonna, David Cross. The film features Spider, a psychological thriller starring Ralph Fiennes.

BOOKS

The author's paternal grandmother, Merija, was a respected schoolteacher and a single mother — after Peter Birkerts, a writer and political dissident, deserted his wife and young son, Gunnar, leaving them to lead a rather stark existence in Riga.

The author's mother, Sylvia, also grew up in Riga, but in more prosperous surroundings. Her father, Mike, was a successful photographer and painter, while her mother, Emilia, ran a millinery shop. They and their family fled war-torn Latvia in 1944 for America, and Mike would eventually serve as a curator at the Cranbrook Art Academy for many years. (Gunnar and Sylvia met in the United States after he came here as an adult refugee.)

The main story on these pages is of Sven Birkerts, though, and a revealing and enthralling story it is, its "plot," often unfolded piecemeal (in what he calls "a cluster of episodes"), is sparked and consistently moved forward by Birkerts' insight and brilliant wit with a language that was not the principal language of his childhood home.

Many of us can most relate some of our own childhood days through these pages and, thus, identify closely with Birkerts.

Here's that dorky kid whose shirt was buttoned all the way to the top, and whose pants were always pulled up too high. Here is a group of rowdy boys, whooping it up as they massacre frogs in a pond. Here are Sunday walks, fishing adventures, reading, school competitions, "Detroit Symphony broadcasts at radio volume on the upstairs radio," the shadowy exploration of piney woods.

(Remember the Susie-Q? Birkerts paints it as "a bright, aggressively middlebrow restaurant somewhere on Woodward Avenue.")

Here is first love recalled so vividly many years after the fact: "I remember driving home in the near dark...pierced by the feeling of full — that momentary light...feeling behind all the mortality some counterbalancing joy that I had never thought possible." (It is interesting to note that this grandson of a photographer/painter and son of an architect displays such strong sense of the visual in his writing.)

And later, here is Ann Arbor in the 60s, animated with political conflict, redolent with marijuana smoke, populated with "feral," hirsute characters like Sven Birkerts himself.

This is a book with super-special appeal for anyone who have ever dreamed of becoming a writer. The frustrations, the failures, the self-doubt, the sheer desperation that can arise when faced with the terror of the blank page, plus the giddy, almost silly exhilaration that comes, at last, with seeing one's words in print — it's all here, proof positive that Birkerts has been there, done that.

If you're remarkable, how nearly unbelievable that he kept it at it, despite the odds, and despite the upheavals in his own personal life.

And how lucky for us readers that he did.
