Guest list important for destination weddings

THE BIG DAY Q&A
KATHIE NINNEMAN
First remember that with destination weddings, you may have to limit your guest list, depending on the space available. This will of course take careful consideration and planning on your part. Family and close friends should be determined first, and if space provides, adding more guests after that,

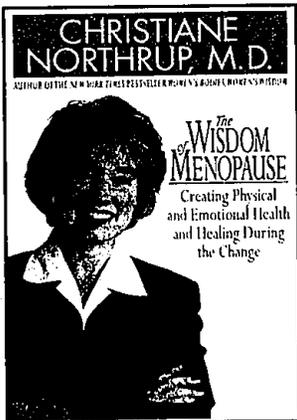

It is always best to work with the site coordinator, if there is one available. They can provide not only helpful suggestions regarding floral arrangements and food service, but the best locations for your photographs as well, insuring the theme you wish to promote. The comfort of your guests is also very important, so be sure to communicate to them any special "dress codes." This can be indicated either on the printed invitation itself, or with an enclosure to the invitation. Kathie Ninneman is a wedding coordinator at St. James Episcopal Church in Birmingham. Send your wedding questions to her at The Birmingham Eccentric, 805 East Maple, Birmingham 48009. Or e-mail kathie-ninneman@hotmail.com.
