Seaside Resorts in England—English Town Has History of 2,000 Years Ago.

Years Ago.

London.—The borough of Bexhill, England, lies in a more exposed position than most of the Susser seaside resorts. There are no rolling downs to protect it as are found at Eastbourne and Brighton and the sea breezes sweep unbroken across the Pevensey levels.

Old Bexhill stands inland. The menor of Bexele, as it is called in Doomsday, beloaged in pre-conquest times to the South Saxon sea. Elizabeth in the South Saxon sea. MEAT SHIFTS DOG FROM BOY

Mad Shepherd's Attack Stayed Just Long Enough to Rescue Lad From Possible Death.

Long Enough to Rescue Lad From Possible Death.

Coatesville, Pa.—The fact that he was delivering meat for his father saved James, twelve-year-old son of William Snyder, from the fangs of a mad shepherd dog which had started to attack the lad.
When the dog sprang at young Snyder the boy with quick wit selfed an order from his express wagon and tossed it to the raving animal. This diverted the dog's attention to the load of meat, but instead of eating any he merely went into canine hysteria over it.
Albert Flahardy, a clerk in a Main street store, saw the boy's plight and with a brick struck the dog in the head, and Charles, Dunleavy, a cont tractor, ended the animals life with a pick. Before attacking the boy the dog ran amuck and bit a number of other dogs.
