THE MAIL-BOX

A good criterion of the kind of a man upon the farm, is the mail box in front of his house. Some of them rest on a straight, upright, nicely painted post, with the box bright and plainly lettered with the owners' name. These as a rule represent that farm. Others may be seen sagging on an old post, the paint all worn off and the name of the patron unreadable. This, too, may truly represent the man who gets his mail from that particular box—Exchange.
