On the Doctor's Orders
 By JANE OSBORN
 (Copyright)

The second time that Larry Ott went to Doctor Manuel's office the renowned nurse was out, but the white-capped nurse who was in attendance suggested to Larry that there might be some message.

Larry patted his head of equine poise, sat down, and as the pretty nurse stepped into the next room quickly passed a hand over his chin. He hadn't shaved since early morning, and he wished now that he had wanted the pretty nurse to see him at his best.

She was standing before him and Larry rose. She handed him an envelope. "I hope you can make it out," she said. "You see, he always writes these out himself. I suppose a doctor's advice is too confidential to dictate to a secretary. You don't look as if you had very much wrong with you."

"I suppose I do look fairly fit," said Larry. "I wouldn't have come if they hadn't pressed the matter at the office. You see, I got mixed up with that mine cave-in out at the works—and I dare say I did look a bit haggard."

"You mean you were one of the three brave men who went down to rescue the men—and you were caught down there those five days?"

"Only three days," said Larry, "and the papers filled it up to thick. We weren't actually injured at all—only a little suffocated and half starved—they sent me over here to Doctor Manuel."

Larry slowly opened the envelope and as slowly drew out the sheet of paper it contained. The message was in thick pencil marks. He read it twice and when halfway through the second time he looked up in great amazement.

"I had heard that Doctor Manuel's conclusions were sometimes surprising, but this beats the Dutch—"

"I suppose you can make it out without any difficulty," she said.

"Oh, it's legible enough," said Larry, "but I'm blessed if I can see how I can carry out instructions."

"If you don't get precisely what he says," warned the nurse, "Doctor Manuel will never consent to give another interview."

In that case, thought Larry, he would never have another opportunity to visit the office and further his case with this charming nurse. He had taken his hat from the table where he had left it and was moving toward the door when with a boldness that seemed to surprise himself more than it did the nurse he said:

"I suppose you will be leaving before long. It's nearly nine. I thought I might take you on your way."

The pretty nurse smiled her acceptance, told Larry that she had been ready to leave when he arrived and went into the inner offices for her hat and coat. And when Larry suggested going the longest way round to her boarding house five blocks away the nurse did not protest. It was after they had stopped in front of her boarding house that she hesitated a moment and said to Larry: "Of course, it is none of my business—but if there is anything I can do to help you carry out Doctor Manuel's instructions I will be very glad to do so. I do hope that there is nothing very seriously wrong with you."

"If you know the advice the letter contains you would probably not have made that suggestion," said Larry seriously. "But the idea had already occurred to me that I might at least ask you about it."

Back in his own room, still thinking of the girl whose name he had not even asked but who had consented to allow Larry to take her home again the next night, he reread the letter. This is what it said:

"Your case is by no means hopeless. Very strict attention to diet is necessary and well-ordered home life. Marry some girl of domestic sort and when you have done this I'll insist for diet list. Living as you do in clubs and hotels any attempt to follow it out would be worse than useless."

The next evening Larry discovered that the pretty nurse was named Rose Drake. They drove an hour in the country and then Larry suggested getting a bite to eat at a quiet little restaurant he knew about. After that he took Rose home with a promise she would spend Sunday with him at the lake.

Then when Sunday came Rose met him with an expression of much amusement. "Whatever the message was that Doctor Manuel gave you—it was all wrong. He found the one he intended for you in the envelope of a man that had come in the same day. Poor thing died of apoplexy before he ever had a chance to get the report. Here's the message you should have received." And Larry read:

"Condition hundred per cent. Remarkable recovery from shock of accident and exposure due to good habits and perfect physique. Make no changes in present diet or mode of living."

"It's something of a relief," said Larry, "because in the message I did get Doctor Manuel advised me to marry—to marry a girl of domestic inclinations who could look after me, and I don't know any girls of domestic inclinations."

"The very domestic," said Rose. "And because Rose made that remark she always insisted that it was she and not Larry who first proposed marriage."

Compare Values Before You Buy An Automobile

These are days when every dollar counts. The period of reckless spending is over. People are going back to the good old-fashioned principles of thrift and economy. Value is again being carefully considered.

Nowhere is this more important than in the selection of an automobile. For the purchase of a car represents a considerable investment. It should not be decided on hurriedly, but only after analyzing every important factor that concerns cost, value and performance. The time to do this is before buying—not afterward when it is too late.

On the basis of cost, performance and the actual comparative worth of every part, the new Ford is a value far above the price you pay.

Compare values carefully—and you are sure to choose a FORD as the car for you to buy.
